Austin, Texas based Green Apple Pediatric, Family Dentistry & Braces has recently issued a parental advisory on the importance of monitoring their child's oral health.

Helping your kids develop a healthy habit of taking good care of their teeth when they are still young is very important. Early understanding and monitoring can set them for good oral health throughout their adult life. Moreover, you can save them from experiencing pain caused by gum disease, cavities, and tooth decay, says Evy Guerrero from the Austin holistic dentist.

Parents should take extra precautions when it comes to their child's oral health, especially because baby teeth are more susceptible to decay and may cause a number of problems, including painful teeth and gums, difficulty with chewing, eating, and sleeping, as well as gum disease and inflammation. Experts maintain that the best way to address these issues is by abiding by consistent preventative oral health care.

There are a lot of things that can be done to help your kids maintain good oral health, and prevent them from pain and trauma caused by tooth decay and gum diseases. Firstly, brush their teeth twice a day when they are still young, and teach them how to do it on their own as they get older. Secondly, use a toothpaste that is appropriate for their age and has the recommended fluoride content in it. In addition to this, make sure to feed your child healthy foods that are rich in vitamins and minerals, and avoid sweets as well as sugary drinks. Furthermore, make it a habit to visit a pediatric dental clinic at least twice a year to prevent any potential problems from happening," Guerrero said.

According to her, it is important to choose a dentist that is capable of handling all kinds of patients, especially kids. Finding a reliable pediatric dentist today is easier than ever. A simple Google search will provide parents with a list of nearby dental clinics alongside their previous patient's reviews and feedback. However, parents are still encouraged to thoroughly research the doctor's certification and licenses, as well as their facilities, before choosing. This can be done by setting up an appointment and personally assessing whether they are capable of providing the best care.

Those who are looking for a professional pediatric dentist in Austin may check out Green Apple Pediatric, Family Dentistry & Braces. They specialize in general family dentistry, pediatric dentistry, braces and specialty dentistry, as well as laser frenectomy. Their dentists and dental technicians are also licensed, accredited, and active members of national regulatory boards, including the Academy of Laser Dentistry (ALD), the American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry (AAPD), the American Board of Pediatric Dentistry, the American Dental Association (ADA), the Texas Dental Association (TDA), the Academy of GP Orthodontics, and the International Academy of Oral Medicine and Toxicology (IAOMT). They also take pride in being one of the top dental clinics in Texas and the surrounding areas, based on positive reviews and recommendations received online.

Thomas Payne said in a Google review that, "I only have good things to say about the practice. Their technicians are so good with our kids and their doctors are wonderful. They have TVs on the ceiling of every room to entertain the kids and they have plenty of toys to play with while they're inside the waiting room. Green Apple even has another playroom for kids to wait in when it's your turn to undergo a procedure. Their professionalism is fantastic, and their attention to details in making the kids feel at home is truly impressive."

"We've had two great visits at Green Apple. Their dentists and dental assistants were very kind and empathetic when listening to our concerns. There was one time when we had a dental emergency and they agreed to see my child on the same day that I called them. What could have been a scary situation for a five-year-old kid was quickly and easily remedied. My son was calm throughout the whole process because he was well taken care of," says Rachel Rogers, another satisfied customer.
