Carmel, Indiana based EZ Rec-Rack is pleased to announce that they are experiencing record-breaking website visits for their patented single person kayak loader.

"Ever since I was little, I have always loved kayak fishing. I grew up in Ohio, where my family owned and operated a marina and fishing charter business. That's why I was around water almost every day. Eventually, when life took me to Indiana, I quickly realized that loading a kayak by myself is not an easy task to do without beating up my fishing gear and my car. I searched all over the internet for some kind of kayak loader to no avail. From there, the EZ Rec-Rack single person kayak loader was born," says Ira Mercurio, owner of EZ Rec-Rack.

In 2017, Mercurio developed a single-person-operated loading roof rack system that can be loaded from the rear of a vehicle without lifting the entire weight of the fishing kayak. It can accommodate large gear and accessories without the need to climb up to the roof of the car. The system can also be detached to fit in the average garage, and only has a total weight of approximately 40 lbs. It comes with several accessories and attachments that can accommodate other outdoor sporting gear, including paddle boards, surfboards, cargo carriers, and cargo boxes. In addition to this, it is also suitable for hiking activities to safely store and load camping gear and equipment.

According to Mercurio, a single person can load their gear in as fast as 01 minute and 15 seconds using the EZ Rec-Rack kayak carrier. Additionally, it is corrosion resistant and is made from a powder-coated aluminum that is suitable for salt-water kayaking and activities. "Outdoor enthusiasts may find it very useful, especially when traveling alone," he said.

Furthermore, he encourages Indiana residents to explore and discover the variety of spots in the local area where friends and families can enjoy outdoor adventure activities. For instance, Sugar Creek provides a plethora of canoeing and kayaking opportunities from Crawfordsville, to Shades State Park, and Turkey Run State Park. Wildcat Creek also allows for an interesting boating experience, from the waters above Kokomo to the Wabash River at Lafayette. In addition, Lake Monroe in the south of Bloomington is a very popular staycation spot for jet-skiing, canoeing, kayaking, and paddleboarding. Meanwhile, the White River West Fork offers a scenic canoeing and kayaking experience with sycamore, river birch, and oak trees bracing both of its riverbanks. The Tippecanoe River should not be missed out on either, it arguably has the most beautiful scenery in Indiana for more relaxing rides and is home to many species of birds, including red-headed woodpeckers, warblers, and wild ducks.

Furthermore, the Whitewater river is suitable for adrenaline-seeking adventurers, and it is known for its fast-flowing waters due to the riverbed's steep gradient. Alternatively, the only section of Indiana where real whitewater paddling can be found is on Big Pine Creek, around 20 miles west of Lafayette, where spring rains and meltwater in April and May turn the creek into an exciting series of whitewater rapids. On the contrary, to those who are looking for a more serene fishing activity, Pigeon River is known for its 250 acres of wildlife area, with an abundance of trout, catfish, and bluegills in its fishing waters. "Most of the canoeing and kayaking spots in Indiana are only accessible if you have your own equipment. With that, take advantage of EZ Rec-Rack's single person kayak loader for an easier gear loading, carrying, and traveling experience," says Mercurio.

Finally, kayaking also offers many health benefits, including improved cardiovascular fitness and increased muscle strength, particularly in the back, arms, shoulders, torso, and legs. It also reduces the risk of wear-and-tear on joints and tissues since paddling is a low-impact exercise. Moreover, research shows that kayaking can be used as a meditative activity to reduce stress and anxiety.
