

Tree Service Provider Announces New Service Area In San Bernardino CA

January 07, 2019

January 07, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Fontana Tree Service LLC, based in Fontana, CA, has revealed that it has a new service area in San Bernardino, since January 1, 2019. San Bernardino is only 9 miles away from Fontana and is therefore a logical place for the tree services company to expand as part of its efforts to allow more people to make use of its services, particularly property owners with tree problems.

Bob Lelle, a spokesperson for the tree services provider, says, "We are happy and excited to have been able to establish another service area, this time in San Bernardino and its surrounding areas. Regardless if your tree is dying or already dead due to disease, insects, lightning strike, or just plain old age, it's very important to remove the dead tree."

He continues, "Dead trees attract pests, including insects such as termites, carpenter ants and other types of wood boring insects. If these pests go uncontrolled, they can cause problems with neighboring trees or even your home. Further infestation can be very costly. Even rats like dead trees as good spots to call home. But if the rats get hungry, there's a good chance they'll be visiting your home to look for food and water."

Dead and dying trees need to be removed because they are weak, and this may have been worsened by termites, so that they may fall down anytime, possibly causing injury to people or damage to property. Thus, property owners get to save money in the long run by having them removed.

Furthermore, diseased trees can also be troublesome for the other trees close by. For instance, mold and mildew can form on a dead tree and this can spread to other trees. Another reason why homeowners would not want a dead or dying tree in their yard is that they are eye sores and therefore, negatively affect the value of the property. By eliminating them, homeowners are actually increasing the value of the property.

A tree service company can also help in trimming or pruning of dead branches from the trees. If those branches are diseased, trimming could prevent the disease from spreading further. Thinning trees will also aid in boosting air circulation and allow more sunlight to reach the branches, which can help in controlling disease. And by getting rid of suckers, the trees are able to get more food and water. Thus, trimmed trees will have better health.

Trained arborists will also know how to repair those V or Y shaped lines between branches. By making those branches more U shaped, this will help prevent the branches from splitting, which can cause problems with those trees. And perhaps, what is most important, is that trimmed trees are better looking.

However, Bob Lelle would like to warn property owners that while tree maintenance may seem like an easy task, it is not really that easy. Rather, it is a dangerous task and statistics have shown that there have been accidents involving such tasks and that the people who got hurt were mostly those who did not have the necessary knowledge and experience. He points out that the job requires skill, strength, and balance. Heavy branches that are about to break, or are not balanced, can fall down at any time and cause injury to children and other people and damage to the home and vehicles.

Bob Lelle says, "Don't wait until the winds or an unexpected storm bring down that limb and cause untold damage or at least an inconvenience in your life. Don't take chances. Hire a tree service professional to assess the potential for limbs causing damage or injury."
