Maryland Hoarder Homes

Dealing with a hoarder home can be stressful on a number of levels. This is particularly true in the event that someone has inherited the property. This individual is now responsible for making mortgage on a property that may require tens of thousands of dollars in repair. The same thought applies to trying to sell the home on the traditional real estate market. Individuals going this route are going to need to be responsible for inspections, repairs, and so much more. This is not a process that will be simple, or even affordable.

Hoarder homes also present a very real physical danger. While the details of hoarder houses can vary from one property to the next, many examples are defined by the fact that conditions have become extremely unstable. It can take weeks, even months, to restore such a property to its original form.

They have purchased countless properties throughout the United States. They are now in the process of buying as many hoarder homes as possible.
