February 11, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Bank foreclosure is imminent if homeowners continue to fail repaying the mortgage. Several missed payments and the bank will send relevant notices. These are warnings that will inevitably culminate in a foreclosure notice. Some homeowners manage to modify their loans or go for refinancing. Some homeowners successfully improve their financial condition and resume paying the installments. Many homeowners in Nashville have had to deal with foreclosures in recent years. The unfortunate consequence of a foreclosure is that a homeowner is left without a house and there is absolutely no return on the investment and the recurring expenses that have been incurred till the last paid installment.

Homeowners often contemplate upon the option of selling their house during a foreclosure. It takes time to sell any type of property. If a house is not in a sought after neighborhood and the condition is not impeccable, the traditional route to selling it by hiring a real estate agent can take months to find a buyer who will agree to pay the ask price. Many buyers may express interest but they might not go ahead with the purchase. Homeowners facing foreclosure do not have the luxury of time. They must sell the house as soon as possible. This can be done by selling a Nashville house to Dependable Homebuyers.

The nationwide We Buy Houses company Dependable Homebuyers is now considering residential properties under foreclosure. While the company has been buying Nashville houses for quite some time now, they are presently interested in properties that are already in the process of foreclosure. Homeowners who have got the foreclosure notice can consult Dependable Homebuyers and explore possibilities. One possibility is a short sale. Those who are yet to receive a foreclosure notice should not wait for such a development but take a proactive decision of selling their house to secure the maximum return on their investment.

Dependable Homebuyers has been buying houses across the state, regardless of the location and the condition of the house. The company deals with property owners directly, without any real estate agent or other third party in the entire process. Homeowners get a cash offer for their property within twenty four hours of the viewing. The sale can be completed in a span of seven business days up to a fortnight at the most. There are no processing fees, upfront charges or any commissions to pay. Dependable Homebuyers are not real estate agents or individual buyers. They are a company and they finance their acquisitions without seeking any help from banks or other lenders.

The proposition for homeowners facing foreclosure in Nashville is simple. Instead of moving out of the house after foreclosure with absolutely no financial gain and losing a prized asset, it is now possible to sell the house and generate some net monetary gain. The sale also empowers homeowners to take back control and schedule their moving out. Banks and their representatives are rarely considerate in this regard. A foreclosure notice is not the end if homeowners choose to sell their Nashville houses to Dependable Homebuyers. The Nashville, Tennessee real estate market is hard to predict, but when a homeowner sells to Dependable Homebuyers they receive a guaranteed offer.
