Pest Control Company In Indianapolis Warns That Rodents Invade Homes More Often During Winter

Perseverance Pest Control, a pest control firm serving Indianapolis, Indiana, has issued a warning to homeowners and property owners that rodents tend to invade homes more often during winter in their effort to escape the cold temperatures. They have also recently published a blog post on their site to warn people that rodents, such as mice, have been found to be hiding in cars and trucks, and have been causing vehicle damage. The reason for this is that rodents are attracted to the warm interior of the vehicles. And because homes also have warm interiors, people can also expect rodents to try to get inside the home.

In a recent article from the National Pest Management Association (NPMA), they warned vehicle owners regarding the threats posed by rodents to their vehicles during winter. For instance, one car in which the heater was not working revealed the presence of a mouse nest in the blower motor. Some cars would have shorted electrical systems because mice have chewed through wires. Vehicle owners are therefore warned to be on the lookout for indications that rodents have found their way inside the car. For example, insulation or wiring insulation that are lying around or under the car can indicate that rodents could have been chewing on wires. There may also be rodent droppings in and the around the vehicle. Homeowners may also want to look for these signs in the house.

Sarah Wenger, owner of PPC says, "Cold weather really brings rodents into the equation. They try to come into the house."

The problem with mice and other rodents is that they tend to chew on things like electrical wires. Also, they can bring in bacteria, viruses and parasites that could adversely affect the health of people living in the home. It is for these reasons, among many others, that homeowners and property owners will require the services of pest control companies.

Sarah Wenger points out that their mission at Perseverance Pest Control is to make sure that the home and loved ones are protected from pests that can negatively affect people?s health. These include ants, beg bugs, bees, beetles, cockroaches, crickets, earwigs, fleas, flies, hornets, millipedes, mosquitoes, silverfish, spiders, ticks, wasps, and weevils.

Aside from offering their pest control services to homes, they also provide their services to commercial establishments. They also work in a range of property management companies and commercial property owners directly, including many business owners throughout the Indianapolis area.

Those who visit the company website will find out that they are really dedicated to helping homeowners and property owners get rid of pests. They also teach people how to prepare their home or property for treatment. For instance, they have made available a bed bug treatment preparation sheet on their site. This is a special checklist that customers need to complete before, during and after the treatment process. They have found that when the checklist is followed, not only are their treatments more effective and faster, but customers find that they consume less time and money in the long run.

The company performs a four-step process to eliminate pests inside the home. These are: full inspection, indoor treatment, protection of perimeter, and regular monitoring. In summary, what they do is identify the pests, eliminate the pests, build a safe and protective barrier from the outside, and then make sure that the pests will not return.

That PPC offers high quality service is attested to by the positive reviews they have received. Also, they have an A rating from the Better Business Bureau (BBB). They have been accredited by the BBB on October 19, 2017, and they have been two years in the business. The company is owned by Sarah Wenger, Matthew Hall, and Brian Cable. They have zero customer complaints and their overall rating is five stars. The counties served include Boone, Hamilton, Delaware, Hendricks, Hancock, Johnson, Marion, Madison, Shelby, and Morgan.
