Platinum Wildlife Removal revealed their results from a recent study today about how serious the rodent problem might be. This study was stimulated by a flood of calls from customers in the Rochester Hills service area concerning the presence of rodents on their properties or inside their home. What they found was alarming.

In short, they discovered that the problem mutated into an infestation. The presence of rodents was confirmed in all locations from where the calls originated, but they found out something more. Natural predators were also present in nearby areas, which suggests that they are forcing the rodent populations to move to other areas - the very areas from where the calls came from.

As a result, Platinum Wildlife Removal decided to issue an alert to the public. With the newly-discovered information, people in the area could be prepared in preventing any rodent penetration into their homes or deal with a penetration they couldn't prevent. Platinum has one a thorough job of informing people why it is so important for immediate action in either case.

Rodents stop at nothing to gain entrance into homes, where they can keep warm and nest their young. It is said that many rodents can squeeze through an opening as small as 1/4 of an inch. The rodents that cannot do the fat rat squeeze use their teeth to chew through just about any part of the home to make an opening large enough to get in.

One cause for alarm here is that rodents might chew through electrical wiring. If they chew through any live wires, it could do more than cause a power outage. It can spark a fire that can spread so quickly that getting out of the home could be a matter of life or death. Even if they don't cause a fire, their presence is so unsanitary that it can make an entire household ill. Some of the diseases can be caused by the presence or rodent urine and feces.

These are just a few of the important reasons why Platinum Wildlife Removal made such an effort to get the public ready to take action, whatever their situation is. This demonstrates the diligence of this company to serve their customers so well. Another good thing that has come from their attention to the problem is that new ideas have been brought to the table on how to more effectively deal with rodents.

Platinum Wildlife Removal spokesperson Kevin Scappaticci says he was impressed by the quest for insights and answers on the part of their customers. This case study reveals in a practical way what's possible with the right information and guidance. The most important thing that was stressed to customers is that if rodents have penetrated their home, they should have the professionals address it, rather than attempt to do it themselves.

Scappaticci says that rodent removal takes professional knowledge. He says that many homeowners feel that they can just chase rodents out and that's the end of it but he continues that this is not true. The company says that rodents congregate together in colonies so removing one rodent is not typically the sole issue. If a homeowner sees one, it is very likely that they have an entire infestation. So again, removing rodents should be left to a professional, according to Scappaticci.

The company states that their rodent removal services help to prevent them from returning. They state that their rodent removal services are a bit more humane than others. Some pest control companies simply chemicals in rodent entry points, leaving them dead in the home, which Scappaticci says creates an entirely different mess for the homeowner.

He states that the rodent removal process begins with exclusion devices that will enable bats to leave the home at night but will not allow them to reenter where they originally got in. Once out, they will not get in again, as the original entry point is closed off in addition to other potential spots. Then the areas of infestation are cleaned of any urine and feces left behind that could cause health problems for the household.
