July 22, 2015 -

Direct Processors, a bank and financial services business, has opened its new headquarters in Vancouver, Washington. From this more central location, company representatives hope to be able to serve more clients across the Washington Area. The company has also launched a brand new website at http://directprocessors.com. The business, which offers credit processing services, hopes that it will be able to support more local businesses this way and thereby, help the local economy grow.

Jeff Easter from Direct Processors says, "We are true experts in the field of credit card processing devices and other such financial services. We pride ourselves not just on the quality of our products, but also on our customer service. We feel that, as we are dealing with financial and therefore highly sensitive information, excellent customer service is key."

Direct Processors is a truly trusted company, offering both electronic bank cards and credit cards including all necessary chips, and card reading devices. They work together with banks, credit card companies, telephone companies and stores with store cards in order to ensure they have the cards they want to provide their customers with.

They also work together with a variety of local businesses who want to add credit card services to their stores. These include restaurants, corner shops and even market stall professionals. Studies have shown that a business tends to grow when card payments are accepted, thus, these services are vital to the local economy.

Direct Processors has been very positively reviewed by its many customers to date. Paul Hales, a corner shop owner, comments, "We have really seen a difference in our bottom line. To be able to reach all those people who don't carry cash anymore has made our store more popular and accessible and, thereby, increased our bottom line. Direct Processors was with us every step of the way and we couldn't thank them enough."

The company has experienced significant growth over the past few months, which has enabled them to also expand their business to the new headquarters in Vancouver, Washington. From the new, more central location, they hope to encourage others to try out their services.
