Peak Performance Tours in Jamison, Pennsylvania has announced that they are now offering Disney performance tours for groups. The company states that these tours are more than merely visiting a Disney theme park, but adds that they put students into the experience.

Bruce Rickert, a representative for the company says, "Students will of course have the pleasure of exploring the park but after that, they are suited up for their own performance. We take visiting Disney to a whole new level by ensuring that students have the best time of their lives."

Rickert says that after the day of exploring either Disney World in Orlando, Florida or Disneyland in Anaheim, California, students are encouraged to be a part of their very own show. The tour company provides all of the needed essentials for students, including setting up the performance.

"Disney performers are the best in their industry," says Rickert. "Students get to learn directly from these famed Disney characters so that they can recreate some of that magic in their future endeavors. Not many people would turn down wanting to learn entertaining from the best."

More information on the performing arts tours can be seen on the company's Facebook page at <https://www.facebook.com/PeakPerformanceTours/>. Rickert states that this is a very popular tour choice for students, and he adds that each park offers its own benefits. The company offers a number of package sizes and types, at different price ranges, depending on the overall need of the group.

Rickert adds that the performing arts program is a good way to help students to build character and to refine their own talents. He adds that those who are interested in learning more can visit the website to read full details about each of the parks and the benefits of the performing arts tour at those parks. During the tour, a coordinator is assigned to each group to work with chaperones and ensure that the program meets all expectations.

Tour managers are also assigned to each group. Tour managers accompany the group throughout their stay to assist with hotels, security, park admission, setting up the performance and other tasks. Managers also confirm restaurant reservations and generally take care of all of the details of the stay so that the students and chaperones simply focus on their trip and the memories that they create.

Rickert states that the company has worked with multiple groups over the years and that they are excited to be offering this Disney themed performance arts tour for students, particularly those who are in performing arts. He suggests that theater art classes and other similar groups check out the information about the tours on the company's website at <https://sites.google.com/site/tripsandtoursforstudents/> to get a better idea of what the tour includes.

Detailed pricing information can be found on the website as well. Group leaders can visit the site and submit an online form outlining the details of the trip, number of students, dates, and other information, and receive a quote for the entire cost of the trip. The website also enables students and leaders to set up a payment profile to make regular payments toward their trip as opposed to paying all at once.

Rickert says that everything is provided during the tour, including hotel accommodations, restaurant reservations, ID cards, admission to parks and other activities, transportation, and around the clock security to ensure the complete safety of all attendees. He states that this is a great opportunity for senior class trips or any group that is interested in learning more about the performing arts.

Those who are interested in learning more about the Disney performing arts trips or any of the tours that the company provides can visit them online. Direct contact information, including an online submission form can be found on the company's website, as well as detailed information about the Disney tours and other tour opportunities that they offer and an online chat feature to speak with a representative.
