March 12, 2019

March 12, 2019 -
Over the past decade, the cost of living has steadily increased. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and StatBureau, inflation has risen by 16.63% while the real wage is at a new low for workers in the past five years, meaning the average worker cannot afford as much now as they could five years ago, had they kept the same job. It is no wonder that everyday workers may have the need to seek financial aid, whether to afford a mortgage on a new house or to make sure their bills are paid off.

The worst increases in living costs are in Los Angeles, California. Knight Frank, a global real estate agency, stated that if, ?at least three homes there have sold for more than $25 million in each of the past three years,? it would be described as, ?ultra-prime.? Similarly, Los Angeles Curbed stated that, ?51 LA homes have sold for that much since 2015,? making it a common occurrence in the area. The price of housing in California is rising at a rapid rate, leading to the sale of some of the most expensive houses in the world.

Anaheim, unfortunately, happens to be located right in Orange County, one of the more expensive regions in Los Angeles. This means that the cost of living for residents of Anaheim are some of the highest in the country. To help with the high costs, The Net Lender has launched their services in Anaheim in order to help residents to swiftly obtain financial assistance. Their website can be found here: https://www.thenetlender.com/locations/anaheim-sunkist-st/.

Today, looking to a bank for help can be a difficult proposition, as those who have financial issues and need to quickly obtain funds may not have a high enough credit score. However, The Net Lender Anaheim seeks to help residents of Anaheim overcome this issue by giving them the ability to apply for TNL?s financial aid using their car title. As stated on the company?s website, residents won?t need to fear being turned down because of their credit score. In fact, the most relevant factor in play when seeking TNL?s assistance is the vehicle?s equity value.

However, the lack of consideration of credit scores is not the only advantage that customers enjoy when employing TNL?s services. A resident of Anaheim may take receive their financial aid right away, rather than wasting time to fill out paperwork at the bank. They would only have to fill out an online form, or call the company and speak to a loan officer, rather than physically going to the office. The Net Lender Anaheim is always working to modernize the experience and convenience of use for their consumers.

A customer could be approved in less than 15 minutes and receive the money right away rather than undergo the mandatory seven day waiting period present in most banks. Considering the mounting cost of living in Los Angeles, the speed at which The Net Lender Anaheim operates is certainly useful. Their clients get the funds they seek faster than many other title companies. In addition, the company tries to make the process as simple as possible. Even after using their car title to apply, the customer can continue to drive their vehicle. There is also no prepayment penalty for them to deal with.
