Dr. Ramiro Morales, who is a plastic surgeon Miami residents can go to, has published a blog post that explains how plastic surgery can help a person's relationship. In the article, Dr. Morales provides five reasons why plastic surgery may be able to enhance a person's personal relationships.

Dr. Morales himself says, "Changing yourself may not seem like it's the most ideal option to fix your relationship. Staying true to yourself is supposed to be the goal when you are within a relationship. However, switching up your appearance with plastic surgery has a few clear improvements with your relationship based on plastic surgery recipients' experiences."

There are five reasons why a relationship can be improved with plastic surgery. First, it can boost a person's confidence and self esteem. And with this improvement in self-confidence, the person's relationship with others, especially a loved one, gets better. Second, it can improve intimacy because the person no longer worries about his or her appearance. He or she no longer feels self-conscious all the time. Third, improving one's appearance will also make a person want more to socialize and to try new things. Fourth, having a better appearance will improve sexual relationship. Fifth, the person becomes more attractive to his or her partner.

Some of the most common services provided by Dr. Morales are breast augmentation, breast reduction, or breast lift. The most common procedure for breast augmentation makes use of implants. This is accomplished by placing silicone or saline implants. It should be noted that saline implants require a smaller incision than for silicone gel implants. According to Dr. Morales, the type of implant to be used will depend on several factors, which is why consultation is required before the procedure.

The breast reduction procedure is for those who have a problem with disproportionately large breasts. This procedure is also important because large breasts can be the cause of a number of health issues. These include difficulty in performing physical exercises, pain at the back of the neck, and breathing problems.

The breast lift procedure involves tightening the areola and the surrounding tissues within the breast and then getting rid of excess skin. The result of the procedure is a firm and raised breast with a well rounded shape and a younger look. While this appears to be a simple procedure, it is quite complex because a large percentage of surgeries usually go wrong. Thus, it is important to carefully choose the surgeon who has a reputation for quality results.

Another popular procedure at the practice known as The Plastic Surgeon Miami, is abdominoplasty, which is better known as the tummy tuck. However, Dr. Morales warns that this procedure is not for everyone. It is not recommended for women who are planning to get pregnant in the future or are planning to reduce their weight by a large amount. This is because pregnancy and substantial weight loss will ultimately cause the skin to go back to its initial drooping state.

Another common procedure offered is liposuction, which is used for contouring the body by removing pockets of fat. The fat can be eliminated from almost all parts of the body, such as the thighs, stomach areas, buttocks, upper arms, cheeks, neck, chin, knees, and back. It involves making an incision in the area where fat is to be removed and using a cannula to dislodge the fat and then the dislodged fat is suctioned. Once again, this procedure is only recommended for certain people, such as those who are healthy, have the right skin, and have a stable body weight.

Dr. Morales obtained his medical degree with honors from the University of South Florida College of Medicine. Afterwards, he completed his general and plastic surgery residencies at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Later, he returned to Florida to become the vice chief of surgery at Memorial Hospital West and to start his own private practice.
