H&W Quality Products, a business that focuses on health and wellness, has just released their first product. The orthopedic coccyx seat cushion, which can be seen on <http://www.amazon.com/dp/B00YI4KH9I>, is designed to help alleviate the discomfort of prolonged sitting, as well as tail bone injuries, etc. The company hopes that they will be able to properly introduce themselves to the market this way, as their product ensures more people can sit in comfort.

Greg Dunsworth from H&W Quality Products reveals, "We are currently in the development stages of a range of different products, and our orthopedic coccyx seat cushion is the first we have completed. We want to bring overall health and wellness to our customers, which means we are developing further products to help alleviate the discomfort associated with everyday tasks like sitting, standing and laying down. We are also working on a range of products that increase comfort and performance in sports and leisure activities."

Over the next few weeks, H&W Quality Products will also be launching their hydration running belt. They believe wellness is about being comfortable, but also about being physically active. It is for this reason that they are creating products that target both issues.

The company has an annual meeting coming up, at which time they will be discussing the direction towards which they will be going and which products will be needed to support that vision. There are two specific annual meetings that will be of importance for this particular company. The first one is the Biology of Aging 2015 meeting and the second one is the American Orthopedic Society for Sports Medicine Annual Meeting. The results that will be obtained from these meetings will also be of influence to the mission of H&W Quality Products.

Customers are encouraged to like the H&W Quality Products' Facebook page on https://www.facebook.com/HWQualityProducts?ref=aymt_homepage_panel. Any special offers and new product launches will be presented on their Facebook page. Additionally, a new website will soon be launched where further information, discounts and new products will also be announced.
