Columbus, Ohio (March 25, 2019) -- Most dogs will eat any kind of food in front of them. One of the responsibilities of a pet owner is to ensure they are providing their dog with the healthiest and most nutritious food for their pet. Sometimes this means changing their food occasionally to meet a specific health need, control their weight, or even to simply give them more nutrients than they are currently getting. DogGear has launched to specialize in researching different types of dog food to provide the best recommendations for pet owners, depending on the breed of dog they have.

DogGear has a global network of people who all have a love for dogs and a passion for ensuring pet owners have the information they need to make the best decisions for their dog. Most of the time pet owners have great intentions on providing their dog exactly what they need but may need a little guidance along the way. There is plenty of misinformation on the Internet, so knowing whom to trust can be challenging. The DogGear team takes great pride in researching every aspect of dog food. This includes the vitamins and nutrients present in the food, the hardness or softness of the food morsels, what breeds the food is best for, what the scientific trends are, and more. All of this information is designed to help pet owners feel confident in their purchasing decision.

About DogGear

DogGear was founded by three military veterans who have a strong passion for dogs and their constant well-being. The company started when the founders realized there is a significant amount of misinformation on the Internet about proper care techniques, getting the right gear specifically for their dog, and more. One of the biggest challenges any dog owner faces is knowing how to properly care for the specific needs of their dog, and that's exactly why DogGear exists.

The experts at DogGear come from strong educational backgrounds, including some of the most recognized business programs in the United States. As entrepreneurs, the team brings more than forty years of experience in different areas, so dog owners can feel confident they are reading factual information based on extensive research when they see a recommendation from DogGear. The entire team at DogGear desires to help dog owners take the best care possible of their dogs, so visit them at www.dog-gear.com to see how they can help.
