RFID Signal Safe has announced their launch of a new website, which can be viewed at www.rfidsignalsafe.com. The company plans to use the website to aid in offering products to consumers that will help to prevent against credit card theft. The website will offer products such as men's wallets and money clips that are designed to block RFID signals on credit cards.

The new website offers information about the new products as well as general safety information for consumers regarding identity theft. Police Detective Samuel Watts specializes in credit card theft. "We see many consumers who have inadvertently provided their credit card information to thieves, sometimes just by standing in line at the grocery store." Watts states that RFID signals can be gathered by cell phones equipped with certain software, and that many thieves now have this technology.

"We know how difficult it is to protect yourself, particularly when you aren't aware of just where the threat is," says Nick Cocchiola of RFID Signal Safe. Our wallets and money clips are designed to completely block the RFID signal from credit cards, keeping thieves from getting to that vital information.

Products offered by RFID Signal Safe include handmade leather wallets and money clips that conceal the blocking technology inside. The bi-fold wallets, which can be viewed at

"We've designed them for both luxury and protection," states Cocchiola. "Our line of security wallets will be available in black textured leather, crocodile leather, and leather and fabric." Credit card theft increases to be a problem, particularly in areas that are high in tourism. By blocking RFID signals on cards, consumers can ensure that thieves will not be able to steal credit card information. "It's a great idea and one that all consumers should consider in order to keep their identities and their bank accounts safe," says Watts.

All RFID Signal Safe products can currently be viewed on the Amazon marketplace, with the leather money clip shown at <http://www.amazon.com/dp/B00ZQMPMEG>. The new wallets and money clips are available now, with new products being planned for release in the near future.
