

Dependable Homebuyers Nashville Creates Controversy With Recent We Buy Houses Ad

April 08, 2019

April 08, 2019 -

Dependable Homebuyers in the Nashville, Tennessee area has created great controversy with area real estate agents. There seems to be great worry that the company is interfering with the status quo for the real estate industry.

The top executives of the company have become very familiar with the standards of the market and have begun to target homeowners that are willing to sell their homes directly to them. Once the properties are selected, they make cash offers to the homeowners. In the instances where homeowners accept the offer, closing is set up and takes place within 7 days. This allows a great solution for homeowners who have a need to sell their home quickly and without having to do costly repairs.

To get the attention of potential clients, Dependable Homebuyers recently ran an ad campaign on Facebook titled "Fire Your Realtor!?" This was met with great offense from real estate agents in the area. Many of the more well known companies became angry with the tactic of the company and view it as a threat to their place in the industry.

Dependable Homebuyers sets themselves apart from traditional real estate agents in that they can guarantee the homeowner a sell. This is something that a real estate agent is unable to offer to clients. Homeowners who do not want to be faced with the inconveniences that often come along with selling a home find working with Dependable Homebuyers to be a great solution because the process is short and straightforward.

For hundreds of years, the real estate industry has been run in the same fashion. As with any industry, there are some main key players who have gotten comfortable with the status quo. They feel that we are rocking the boat and posing a potential threat," says Evan Roberts of Dependable Homebuyers. "We have defined our strengths and learned to use it to benefit our clients when it comes to selling their home. We make the best possible offer for our clients, getting them the money they deserve for their home."
