Infinit Lash Products, based in Del Mar, California has announced that they have just released a video onto YouTube. The video outlines how to safely remove the glue that holds on eyelash extensions.

Tasha Land, a representative for the company says, "So many people are using eyelash extensions these days, and while they are great, there will come a time when one wants to remove them. We wanted to give people a step by step explanation for how to safely remove eyelash extension glue. Simply ripping off those extensions could damage the lashes and not removing the glue that holds extensions on could do the same. This video is designed to help eyelash extension wearers to do so safely."

Land says that there are a number of products on the market today that make claims about removing the glue that holds on eyelashes, but she warns that not all of these products are alike. She says that once a product is found that works as it should, those wearing eyelash extensions need to know the process for safely removing those extensions and any leftover glue from their eyelids.

"It's not a matter of simply wiping off the glue," says Land. "Eyelash extension glue is designed to hold those lashes in place no matter what. It's not going to simply wipe off with a tissue. There are a number of glue remover products on the market that do a really good job, but that's only part of the process. In order to safely and effectively remove that glue, there are a few specific steps that must be taken.

Land says that the video that explains how to remove eyelash extension glue gives a detailed explanation of each step in order to ensure that users do not harm their eyes when removing the glue. Eyelash glue can get into the eyes which could cause irritation or serious other side effects. Land says that effectively removing the glue is a process that takes a bit of time and that should be followed verbatim in order to protect the eyes.

"Eyelash extensions are not dangerous per se," says Land. "But, not wearing them properly or not removing them properly can be dangerous. We just want everyone to enjoy wearing their extensions without worries of harming their eyes, so the video was made to give an overview of how to remove the extensions and protect the eyes at the same time."

Land states that those wearing eyelash extensions should check their glue remover products to ensure that they are safe to use in this delicate area. She states that some products can contain chemicals and other ingredients that could be quite harmful when used on the eyelids.

Infini Lash Products offers a remover for eyelash extensions that works in about a minute. Land states that the professional grade formula is completely safe for use and has been approved by the ITQA to safely remove lash extension glue. She adds that the formula can be used by professionals in shops, and says that the product has a blue gel color that makes it easy to see where it is being applied.

Land adds that the company's eyelash extension glue remover is available on the Amazon marketplace for salon owners and workers and that it does not cause irritation as many other remover products have been known to do.

Those who are interested in learning more about the glue remover can visit the company's page on the Amazon marketplace for this and other products that they have available. Those interested in learning the steps for safely removing eyelash extensions and the glue that holds them on can view the video on YouTube or contact the company via their website. Land states that they are always available to answer questions and to help those who wear or apply eyelash extensions to do so in a safer and more attractive way.
