Del Mar, California based Infinit Lash Products recently launched a Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ) section on their website to answer the public's most common questions regarding eyelash extensions and lash extension glue.

"Getting eyelash extensions is considered a luxury to many people. Women invest their hard-earned money to look good and feel confident about themselves, which is why, as lash professionals, it is our duty to educate our clients on the proper maintenance of lash extensions so they can fully enjoy the product and maximize its effects," says Tasha Land, founder of Infinit Lash Products.

As noted on the company's website, most commercially available lashes are made of mink hair or synthetic materials. They are typically referred to as "mink" and "silk" to differentiate the types, but both are made from synthetic materials. Meanwhile, Infinit states that their lash extensions are made from 100% polyester fiber extensions, and they offer a variety of lash lengths, thickness, and curls that are suitable for daily use.

Land explains that the general public has a lot of misconceptions when it comes to using eyelash extensions.

She says that many people avoid using eyelash extensions because they are scared of having allergic reactions. "Allergic reactions rarely occur, but they do happen. At least 5% of the population is known to be allergic to cyanoacrylates, which is an active ingredient of lash extension adhesives. That's why it is important to always do a patch test before using any product," says Land. People who develop an allergic reaction will most likely experience swelling of the eyes (puffy eyes) after the lash application. She notes that an oozing discharge is not a symptom of allergy, and the whites of the eyes are expected to remain clear.

Next, Land states that people often ask this question: "How Long Can Eyelash Extensions Be Worn?" She explains that it varies from person to person depending on their lifestyle, how fast their natural lashes grow, as well as how well the user is taking care of the lash extensions. "Based on our personal experience at our lash studios, most of our clients return once a month, usually every 3-4 weeks after the initial lash application. Some clients prefer to visit more often to check whether their eyelash extensions are still in tip-top condition. Moreover, we always advise our customers to read the after-care instructions so they know how to properly take care and maintain their eyelash extensions," she said.

Meanwhile, some believe that eyelash extensions can ruin natural lashes but Land confirms that this is not true. She explains that extensions do not pull out the natural lashes prematurely. "Each lash grows at its own unique rate and it is only normal to shed a few lashes a day. When applied skillfully and with precise bonding and placement, extensions should grow out and shed with each lash as if no extension were on it," she added. However, she points out that when careful isolation is not practiced, a group of lashes will get stuck together and fall out in clumps, resulting in lash loss.

Finally, Land affirms that Infnit's lash products can be used in water, and users can continue to do activities including swimming, getting a facial, or relaxing in a sauna. She states that their lash extensions and adhesives hold up well with humidity and, while excessive water may cause wear and tear on the lash extensions, such activities need not be avoided.

Those looking for high quality lash extensions and adhesives may check out Infnit Lash Products on Amazon. Their products are highly recommended by many of their loyal customers, including personal users as well as lash professionals.

One satisfied salon owner said on Amazon, "Infnit's adhesive is my new favorite eyelash extension glue. I use it with both my classic and volume sets since it has a smooth consistency, which I like because it makes the placement easier for me. I've had clients return after 6 weeks with extensions still on, and that never happened with my old glue. I've also used this glue on more sensitive clients as well without any complaints. I will definitely buy again."
