Peak Performance Tours in Jamison, Pennsylvania, recently announced that they are now offering Disney performance tours for schools that focus on the performing arts, particularly in a Disney World or Disneyland setting. The company states that the student performance travel is offered for both Disney Parks in the United States; in Orlando, Florida and in Anaheim, California.

Bruce Rickert, a spokesperson for the travel company says, "Students on these tours will have the experience of exploring the parks and in taking part in their own performance. Disney parks are world-renowned for their performances. These tours help students to get in on those performances and learn some of the vital lessons that these Disney characters and actors have to teach."

Rickert says that visiting the parks from a riding the rides perspective is thrilling enough for some students, but their performance tours take their Disney experiences to a whole new level. He states that students on these tours are encouraged to take part in their own show, for which the tour company handles all of the details. Students are provided with everything that they need for their performance so that they simply have to learn and enjoy their experience.

More on the performance tours can be seen on the company's website or on their Facebook page at <https://www.facebook.com/PeakPerformanceTours/>. Rickert says that the company's social media pages offer a look at past student tours and performances to get an idea of the good time that students will have on these tours.

“For any student who is interested in performing arts, these tours are a must,” says Rickert. “Disney performers are the best at what they do and these tours give students the opportunity to learn directly from these Disney performers. They get to recreate some of that Disney magic in their own endeavors in the future.”

Rickert says that the company can accommodate tour groups of any size. They offer a range of different tour types, price ranges and package sizes, all of which can be customized to meet the specific needs of the school or group.

The company states that students who take part in the tour company's performing arts program tour have the opportunity to build character and to refine their talents. The company's website offers a complete list of the experiences that students will learn and how schools or groups can plan out their tour to meet their specific needs.

During the tour, each group will be assigned a specific tour manager who will help them to get to all of their stops on time and ensure that the entire trip runs smoothly. Tour managers help the group with their check in and check out at hotels and other points of interest, as well as with security, admission to the parks and setting up their performance. All details of the tour are handled by the company. Rickert says that the chaperones and students simply have to enjoy their time on the tour.

Rickert urges those who are interested to follow the company on their Twitter page at <https://twitter.com/pptours> for updates or follow them on Facebook. The company website also provides detailed information about this and other tours that the company offers. Those interested in taking a Disney performance tour can contact the company to get an estimate of the cost. The company provides a platform that allows chaperones and students to pay for the tour over time, all of which can be done online for the tour group's convenience.

Those who are interested in learning more about this or any of the tours that the company offers can do so on their website. Rickert says that any performing arts class or school will be pleased with the learning experience that this tour teaches. The company also provides other tours for other interests.
