August 24, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

JGM Properties, a family owned commercial property management company based in Bloomington, is offering flexible terms during the negotiation process on commercial real estate for rent in MN. The company said that they take pride in making communication a priority, which they feel is crucial during the negotiation of the lease.

Eli Russell, spokesperson for JGM Properties, made the following statement: "Our success in negotiating commercial real estate in Minnesota can be seen in all of the positive testimonials that we have received. We understand that every tenant has their own individual needs, so what might work for one doesn't necessarily work for another. By offering flexible terms, and providing the option of short and long-term leasing, tenants are able to reap excellent rewards from the property they rent." JGM Properties urges all businesses to think carefully before negotiating a lease. Factors that should be considered are: setting the term of a lease, figuring out what type of expenses will be encountered, deciding on who will be handling maintenance and repairs, as well as many other considerations. "It is important that the tenant read carefully through the lease so that the details are clear before signing anything. This will prevent future misunderstandings," added Eli Russell.

For those who would like to find more information on commercial real estate for lease in MN, please visit the company's website.
