

Lifemark Gets BOW Girls' Seal Of Approval With Their Bento Box Segmented Lunch Kit

The Bento Box of Lifemark Labs, British Columbia has recently attained a highly favorable review of the popular YouTube channel BOW Girls. The Canadian based company has received positive feedback for their lunch kit since its release on their Amazon store earlier this year; however, the one from BOW Girls is of the highest profile yet. "It's kid approved," Britney, one of the presenters summarized.

The lunch box by Lifemark Labs is a container that has segmented compartments. The hallmark feature of this box is promoted to be the seep proof seal that is formed when it is closed. "These stylish lunch boxes are completely leak proof, even between compartments," Mark Pasay, co-founder of Lifemark explains. One customer, Marcus, experimented with his product, "I've tried dropping this lunch box with mashed potatoes and even juice inside just to see if anything leaks out and it all remained intact. When they say it is air tight, they meant it! Might be the best bento box for the money." This fills a gap in the market for a suitable lunchbox that provides this feature as standard.

Since the publishing of the review on the BOW Girls' YouTube channel, the video has received hundreds of views in the span of several days. The video features the sister presenters, Briena and Britney, who put the lunch box through several test trials. First, the box was used to heat some food in the microwave by following the caution of Lifemark to remove the lid before doing so. Additional food was added to the lunch box including fluids and was tested as it was swiveled and shaken around. In the end the presenters agreed that there weren't any leaks among the compartments, or outside the lunch box. This Bento Box review was also published in the feedback section of the product page on Amazon.

The company also offers a lifetime guarantee as an indication of the quality they are offering. As a promotion for their lunch box, Lifemark is currently offering a sale on the Bento Box with 56% off the retail price. The special price is supplemented with another offer for a free eBook with every Bento Box.
