Alice Palazzolo with Tempoe LLC in Manchester New Hampshire has announced a new blog publication. The post centers on the enhancement Tempoe has made to their products. On top of that, Palazzolo notifies readers of the individual roles and credentials of two executives who were recently added to the executive leadership team.

Palazzolo writes about Tempoe being a frontrunner in no-credit required shopping. It was formerly known as WhyNotLeaselt. The company created a new image to give better thought to their enhanced products for vendors and customers. She says that the new brand is a representation of the company's plans. Those plans were created with the intent of developing the brand's offerings so that it provides more products to the industry.

She goes on to note that Tempoe president Orlando Zayas said that the company has made significant enhancements to its no-credit required program. Additionally, the president said that they will continue to create new and innovative products.

Palazzolo discusses the changes that Tempoe has made to its program. They include bringing in mobile-friendly applications, custom-made marketing materials, and supplementary support tools for retailers.

She keeps on with the topic and talks about the innovative technology that Tempoe has. It's the inTempoe product that drives repeat business for vendors. Palazzolo says that it's a complete technology for fast integration with e-commerce, mobile, kiosks, and point-of-sale (POS) systems. It's a ready-to-use system integration platform that enables additional payment options for retail shoppers in multiple environments. With this, the company benefits for speed-to-market and there's no need for expensive human resources.

Palazzolo restates what Zayas said about inTempoe by saying users can choose the right integration because inTempoe works with the systems that stores already have. He added that when their customers grow their businesses, inTempoe will keep up with them. He asserts that with the services offered by inTempoe, companies will find it easier to get sales.

Palazzolo goes on to state the latest additions to the executive leadership team, with their role and function to the company. She starts off with Matt Welton as Tempoe Senior Vice President of Sales and Marketing. Palazzolo writes that Welton has been in sales and marketing in retail finance for more than 25 years. He has filled roles as a technology provider, a lender, and a retailer.

He worked for a number of Fortune 500 companies and some start-up establishments. Welton and his teams have developed various large enterprises with clients such as American Signature Furniture, ABC Appliance, Home Depot, True Value Hardware, and Microsoft.

Palazzolo goes on to give an account of Welton's responsibility as SVP of Sales and Marketing. She mentions that Welton has control over revenue growth for Tempoe and sales teams, and oversees strategic account management.

She also notifies readers that Welton holds a BA in political science from Penn State University. He's living in Austin, TX, with his wife, Jennifer, and son.

Palazzolo also writes about Quincy Sterling who joined Tempoe in July 2018 as Vice President of Operations. He has more than 20 years of operational and executive management experience serving BPO (Business Process Outsourcing), as well as start-up financial institutions. Sterling has always been establishing strong 'success-based cultures' in the workplaces he has been in.

Palazzolo details Sterling's credentials in her article. She says that Sterling serves as a business owner of all Tempoe operational functions that include the Business Operations support, Operational P&L, collections organizations, and domestic and international customer service.

Palazzolo's article expands on Sterling's perspective about the best customer service. The executive's belief is that their performance indicators must be focused on metrics that really matter. He also states that when employees perceive and contribute to day-to-day objectives, they see how they affect the customer's satisfaction.

Palazzolo mentions that Sterling holds a B.A. in Communications from the University of Texas at San Antonio. He's living in Cincinnati, OH, with his family.
