American Quality Management, based in Montebello, California, has announced that they have celebrated Earth Day by promoting awareness of the importance of ISO 14001 certification. ISO 14000 certification enhances an organization's marketability particularly for customers who advocate for the environment and support brands that are environmentally responsible. Companies can also benefit from cost savings resulting from cost-effective ways of reducing waste and using green energy technology for more efficient energy consumption when complying with the ISO 14001 standards.

ISO 14001:2004 is a world renowned quality management system that offers a blueprint for organizations when making vital business decisions regarding operations that can affect the environment. By being certified to ISO 14001 standards, businesses can systematically assure that they are complying with local and international laws on environmental protection, thus reducing the risk of penalties, fines, and public boycotts. Such businesses are also able to demonstrate the presence of a corporate policy of being environmentally responsible.

To achieve ISO 14001 certification, an organization may want to get the services of ISO 14001 consultants.

This can make the process of attaining certification simple, actionable, and most of all successful. Furthermore, working with a consultant is vital because there have been recent changes to the ISO 14001 standards. Thus, there is a need to consult with experts who are knowledgeable regarding the 2015 revision to ISO 14001.

Connie Smith, spokesperson for American Quality Management, says, "Our dedicated team of consultants and auditors works closely with you to identify core processes and implement required processes. We will provide properly defined projects including specific goals, milestones, agendas, status reports and action items to ensure you have the tools at your fingertips to make the decisions you need for your company."

The team of consultants will work with the client to develop a program that will fit the needs of the organization. For instance, they custom-fit the implementation of processes to comply with the AS and ISO standards. Also, they can customize the processes for consulting and system maintenance, such as system documentation, project management, risk management, process management and process mapping, training, corrective and preventive actions, management reviews, supplier surveys, calibration, and customer satisfaction.

The team of consultants from American Quality Management can also help in on-site consumer audit support. In terms of training, this has to do with internal auditing, root cause analysis, corrective and preventive actions, team work, risk assessment, lean principals, and value stream mapping. In terms of safety, this has to do with safety documentation, safety training, safe inspections, illness injury prevention program, OSHA requirements, and safety meetings.

Connie Smith has this to say about their ISO 14001 consulting services, "Going green shouldn't put your organization in the red. If you're ready to get with the ISO 14001 trend, American Quality Management's Environmental Consultants can help you clean up your act without cleaning out your wallet. Contact us today for a free consultation and we'll show you how to go green while saving some "green" as well."

ISO 14001 is a viable option of any business or organization. When an organization is going through the process of implementing this standard, American Quality Management will help them clearly specify a set of objectives and then create a world-class system to help accomplish those objectives. Their ISO 14001 consulting services will also advise the organization on how to effectively maintain their new environmental management system so that all of their daily activities and operational procedures will always be compliant with the ISO 14001 standards.

American Quality Management is a consulting and auditing firm that will help an organization get certified to certain standards like ISO 14001, AS9100, AS9120, or ISO 9001. The company's team of consultants has been helping companies achieve and maintain their AS and ISO certifications for the last 25 years.
