May 14, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Imperial Crane Services Inc. provides the ability for businesses to rent a crane in Chicago, Illinois. Imperial Crane recently celebrated more than five decades in the industry.

BJ Bohne, President and CEO of the company says, "For the past 50 years, we have been providing crane rentals for clientele in a range of different industries. We are proud of the legend that we have created and we look forward to serving our clients for the next 50 years."

Imperial Crane boasts a huge fleet of cranes and other equipment that have been utilized over the years for such famous structures along the Chicago skyline, a Citgo petroleum plant, and various other tasks. Founded in 1969 by John Bohne, the company has grown from a single 25 ton crane to now include a multitude of equipment.

"What has not changed is our dedication to our customers," says Bohne. "We have grown over the years from just over 80 employees to more than 500 today, and we have increased our fleet from just 30 cranes to more than 300. We are proud of our growth and do not plan to slow down anytime soon."

Bohne says that 50 years in any industry is a milestone and that the company is proud to have been offering construction crane services in Illinois for the past five decades. Bohne is also the CEO and founder of a number of other businesses throughout the nation, and serves as philanthropist for his charity, The Bohne Foundation, which is dedicated to helping children, education, medical research and various communities throughout the globe.

Bohne states that the company credits their customers for their prolonged success and their years of business. The company currently offers a fleet of construction cranes that can be rented or rented to own anywhere in the nation.

Construction cranes are used for the building and development of most commercial structures today, as well as many residential areas. Bohne says that without the use of a crane, construction would be much more difficult, near to impossible depending on the situation. He states that because of this dire need, his company has always been dedicated to offering the best in service for their construction clientele, and he adds that they will continue to operate on the same values and principles that were established by his father when he founded the company in the 1960s.

Imperial Crane offers rentals, as well as sales of cranes through their official website. Those who are interested can request a quote for their needed fleet through the website, as well. The online quote request page offers a space for those interested to fill in information about the overall scope of their project so that a representative can return them a detailed quote for their crane rental or purchase. Those who would like to rent to own a construction crane can find this information on the company's website, as well.

The website also offers information about events and happenings within the company and a media page where they list news articles and magazine highlights. The company has been featured on the cover of various industry magazines over the years, including a recent cover feature in Crane and Rigging Hotline Magazine.
