June 05, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Dallas, Texas based Key Health Plans recently published a new blog post covering everything people need to know regarding the Montana court ruling and their health insurance. The advisory explains how the momentous court ruling affects insurance companies and those who have been affected by the Trump administration's abrupt ending of payments in October 2017.

"We welcome the class action court ruling resulting from the violation of the Government's statutory obligation created by Congress in the Affordable Care Act. The ruling will help many vulnerable people and their insurance companies receive reimbursement for treatment they need," said Brian Neal of Key Health Plans. Their blog post on the ruling notes that the ruling may be challenged by his administration, and Key Health Plans will be closely monitoring the situation as it develops.

Key Health Plans is honored to have grown from their humble beginnings, with a few dedicated people in a small Dallas, Texas office, to being licensed in 47 states. Through that growth, the company has helped thousands of people receive advice on the Medicare plan options, individual health, group health, life, and ancillary products which best match their needs. "We are genuinely proud of having helped thousands of Americans find peace of mind and economic stability. We maintain our unrivaled understanding of the health insurance market because we want everyone to receive the care and treatment they need and want," said Neal.

The next open enrollment period, when consumers can shop for a new health insurance plan, is slated between November 1st and December 15th. Since, "they will have already accounted for the disruption to the Affordable Care caused by Trump and the Republicans in Congress, we expect our clients to benefit from smaller increments in premiums than in prior years, and possibly even lower rates," said Neal. Those concerned with how this will affect them can either call directly, chat online, or send a message from the firm's website. Visitors may also use the website to browse more insurance information to help them understand how health insurance plans work.

Many people looking at healthcare plans for the first time may not be aware of some of the terminology used, like coinsurance, copayments, plan deductibles, and maximum out-of-pocket amounts. It can be even more confusing due to the constantly changing rules. However, the ruling will help those who were insured under the Affordable Health Act, who have had to undergo very expensive treatments (e.g. for cancer or life saving surgery), to have the peace of mind that they no longer face unlimited medical bills.

Key Health Plans helps everyone find the best health insurance policy for their individual situation, as not all plans are created equal. They keep abreast of how the market moves to address new needs and services, ensuring that their clients are offered the best targeted plans. Though many independent-minded Americans think they just need to spend a few minutes researching over the internet, it is not as simple as picking an HMO (Health Maintenance Organization) anymore—and, of course, they would need to get their primary care physician to refer them.

Even if the process were that simple, understanding whether the information on their HMO's website is accurate and up to date can be a headache worth avoiding. Deciding whether an HMO, PPO (Preferred Provider Organization), or EPO (Exclusive Provider Organization) is best is worth double checking with an expert who can guide them to find the best path forward, saving the client from both disappointment and out of pocket expenses.

Now that the Trump court ruling is in, Key Health Plans will be there to help their clients ensure that the obligations due from the government are received from the Judgement Fund, which Congress created to handle this kind of situation. Their licensed agents help their clients throughout the process, assisting with questions, claims, and any concerns. The firm notes that now may be the best time for clients to shop around the market with Key Health Plans and review the best options currently available.

Those concerned with sending personal information over the internet will be pleased to know that Key Health

Plans use the latest data protection technology. This helps ensure that their customers are as fully protected as possible against fraud by relying on encryption techniques, antivirus programs, and an SSL certificate on their site?and this protection also extends to mobile phone users. Key Health Plans makes enrolling in the right health coverage an easy process. They have no hidden fees associated with their services, and potential customers will be glad to know that a no cost review is only a phone call away.
