Nassau, NY - Due to a recent USCIS policy shift, illegal immigrants are facing stricter enforcement of immigration laws. The mandate calls for deportation if an immigrant loses a petition for a visa extension, if an immigrant has been charged with a crime, or if an immigrant has done something the Department of Homeland Security believes to be a crime, even if the person was never arrested or charged.

The Gordon Law, P.C. ? Nassau Immigration Attorney division has experienced and knowledgeable lawyers specializing in immigration law and offer individualized services for Long Island immigrants who fear or are facing actual removal from the United States. Their law firm helps clients achieve their dreams, whether it is becoming a United States citizen or getting a green card, while not running afoul the complex and constantly changing immigration laws, rules, regulation and policy changes.

The team of lawyers at the Gordon Law, P.C. - Nassau Immigration Attorney division can handle virtually any and all immigration law matters including but not limited to strategizing deportation and removal defenses, waiver applications, green card applications, naturalization and citizenship, extreme hardship waivers, k-fiance visas, deportation defense, deferred action for childhood arrivals, temporary work visas, H1b and employment visas, document review, compliance and more.

Their Nassau immigration attorneys understand that the fear of deportation, immigration concerns and other related issues can be extremely difficult for clients and their families. The consequences of fraudulent behavior and criminal conduct on an immigration matter often doesn't make sense and can have drastic immigration consequences, including deportation, detention without bond, being denied naturalization, a visa or re-entry into the United States.
