June 20, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Chore Relief is gaining traction from property managers, and landlords as the go-to app and marketplace that allows them to name their own price for handyman and contractor services. The company, which is located in Chicago, Illinois, recently received a milestone review. The review was provided by a client for ChoreRelief on IOS, and is their fiftieth such review to date.

Tarik Khribch, CEO and founder of the company says, "We are simply thrilled that property managers are finding our app so useful and reliable. This latest review was a pleasure to read and we are glad that our clients are finding the time to share with us how they feel about our app and its function in their busy lives."

The company just recently announced its official business launch and within days had people downloading their app for Android and Apple devices. The company states that the app will be very helpful to contractors, property owners and managers in helping with their management tasks. The company states that they believe that affordability and quality should not be exclusive when it comes to property management. The app enables users to have on-demand access to professionals who can provide needed services, and users are often connected with each other in less than an hour. Khribch says that the company exists so that property managers and owners can have access to the services that they need at the prices that they deserve.

The latest review, which was provided on the App Store by an IOS user states that the app is a, "Great idea and easy to use." The reviewer states that it took less than a full minute to post a particular job that he needed to have done and that he received bids for the job that were even under the budget that he set. He adds, "It's great to be able to connect with people who can perform these jobs without having to wait on newspaper ads to run or Facebook ads. This app makes it so much easier to find professionals to do the job that I need done, and do it in a timely manner."

The app is not only available for IOS. On the ChoreRelief for Android page, there are similar stellar reviews. In fact, the app has a near 5 point rating on both its Android and IOS play store pages. Khribech states that the aim of the app was to take the stress out of property management, and he believes that by the reviews that they have received, they have done their jobs.

The app enables property managers and owners to connect with construction and other service professionals for a number of jobs that they may need done. For instance, if a property manager needs to replace flooring after a less than stellar tenant has moved and needs to find someone to perform this task under a certain budget or timeline, the app would connect the property manager with the person to do the job. The company states that in many cases, more than one company may be provided so the property manager will need to determine which specific company can best provide the job that needs to be done.

ChoreRelief provides a benefit to property owners and managers by helping them to find the services that they require but at prices that are not too over the top. It can connect property managers and owners with professionals for landscaping, cleaning, handyman services, moving, and more, and the app shows property managers only vetted service providers and contractors to help ensure that they get the right job done.

Khribech says that once the app is installed, the process is easy. The property owner or manager simply inputs the details of what they need done, and they can suggest a budget for the job if they wish. The job is then dispatched to area professionals who can complete the job, and the property manager will select who he or she thinks is the best fit. When the job is finished, invoicing and payment can be done through the app as well.
