

New At-Home STD Test Kits For Chlamydia Testing

July 02, 2019

Chicago, Illinois - July 02, 2019 -
The only way for someone to be sure that they have Chlamydia is getting tested. Meet Positives, a site that has dedicated its resources towards providing a platform for singles living with STDs has started a new service that aims at enabling at-home STD testing. This simply means that people can easily test for STDs at home.

This is to encourage people to get tested and fight the spread of STDs. ?We have discovered that there are many people who would love to know their status but are afraid of walking into a testing clinic. This is because most of them are afraid of the stigma associated with testing positive for an STD. With the home STD testing kits we are offering, people will be in a position to test for STDs at home in all the privacy they need,? said Jack Lombardi, founder of Meet Positives during the announcement.

The at-home Chlamydia test kit is all about sample collection. The person interested in getting the test will have to collect samples which may be urine or vaginal swabs. The samples will then be sent to a lab where they will be tested for Chlamydia. The results will be available through private means which protects the person?s identity and gives them the privacy they need to feel confident enough to get tested.

?If you would like an STD test before your next partner, the at-home STD testing is a great option,? added

Jack Lombardi
