Lipasun is an online blog that focuses on plumbing and heating in Trenton, Ontario with dozens of posts on a wide variety of related topics. The blog offers pages upon pages of useful information on plumbing and heating, which can notably be used by both professionals and homeowners. The blog can be found online at <http://www.lipasun.com/>.

Run by Rob Spyder, the blog covers everything to do with heating and plumbing in Canada. Spyder has travelled from one province to another for over ten years and has visited a variety of locales, from big cities to the most remote areas, helping Canadians find ways to cope with the changing seasons. "If you haven't been to Canada, you haven't experienced yet just how freezing it can get here," says Spyder. "It is why we all can't live without our trusted furnaces or other forms of heating. I have personally seen the struggle that all Canadians face, including myself, when it comes to winter-proofing their homes and even their plumbing. If you live in a place where the weather can reach an extreme temperature, the last thing you want to experience is to have no heating or running water. Life would be unbearable without a good heating and plumbing system, that's for sure."

According to Spyder, the blog is a personal database which talks in great detail about his passion: heating and plumbing. It is his way of sharing his years of experience with the world through well-researched articles, images, videos, illustrations, and more. Each article is guaranteed to teach the reader something new that can help them deal with their heating and plumbing a lot better than they did before. Spyder says, "Hopefully, my blog can help you with your particular heating and plumbing concerns. You can also subscribe to my newsletter, so you would always get to read my posts no matter how busy your life can get."

Taking care of one's heating and plumbing is incredibly important, and perhaps even more so in Canada, with the extremes many people in the country face on a yearly basis. A broken heater not only makes one's home uncomfortable to stay in, it can be a potential health hazard during winter, with temperatures falling low enough to be a threat to one's health. Rob's blog is aimed at helping people identify what might be wrong with their heating or plumbing systems, determine what kind of help they need, and maybe even fix it themselves if possible. At <https://lipasunheatingandplumbing.blogspot.com>, one can find a variety of tips and tricks to help deal with almost any issue concerning a heating unit or plumbing system.

Someone with less experience might not be able to identify what is wrong with any of their systems. As one of Spyder's blog posts says, "Some issues are obvious and noticeable while some are subtle and require thorough examination to determine the issue. If you know what you are looking for, it simply means that you will have an easier way of identifying potential and developing problems as early as possible before they become too much to handle."

The blog also features a number of articles that go into detail about maintenance and how to keep one's plumbing and HVAC systems running efficiently for longer periods (through regular maintenance and cleaning). "Just as white blood cells are the first line of defense in our body, regular maintenance is also the first thing we need to do if we want to defend our HVAC systems from having system failures and malfunctions," notes Spyder. "However, aside from just maintaining your equipment, it is also important to keep an eye on signals that may indicate that there is indeed something wrong with your unit. Gradual increases in our utility bills are easily overlooked if the increase is relatively small, especially if it is a few cents."
