August 20, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Staging is a process of improving the physical and hence aesthetic attributes of a property. The process is more common for residential properties for sale than commercial spaces. Real estate agents in Baton Rouge often insist on staging. Some homeowners are unsure if staging is indeed required. Evan Roberts, the owner of Dependable Homebuyers, the most reliable We Buy Houses company in Baton Rouge, has suggested that homeowners should stage their properties. He says that staging can not only facilitate a sale but it can expedite the whole process and also secure a much better price for the property.

Mr. Roberts has explained the correlation of staging and sale of homes in Baton Rouge. A staged property looks and feels more welcoming, homely and satiating. Buyers are always looking for a plethora of attributes in a house. If a property does not allow them to imagine a nice and comfortable lifestyle at the house, then a buyer shall not be interested and a closing offer will remain elusive. Staging is a relatively easy and surefire way to entice buyers and to entice them later. The first stage of impressing buyers is through online listing or any other medium of approach chosen by a seller. The photos should be impressive enough for a buyer to be interested. No matter how professionally a photo is shot, a property that is not staged will always look less appealing than one that has been staged. Here's a recent press release they published.

Staging paves the way for better photos. This draws more interest online. Staging also improves the aesthetic appeal of a property so it is more impressive for buyers when they swing by for a tour. Even if a homeowner is hosting an open house, staging is imperative as subtle accentuations can change the mind of a potential buyer. Influencing buyers is not easy but a staged property increases the possibility. Buyers are much more likely to feel positively about a property after it is staged. They are also more likely to make a closing offer. This offer will not be a hard bargain, as is the case for most sellers and buyers. A staged property is perceived to be in demand, more so in comparison with houses that are in poor conditions. This leads buyers to feel a need to make a closing offer before the house is taken off the market.

Dependable Homebuyers has been assisting innumerable homeowners with staging over the years. The company has also purchased houses outright without staging. But Roberts says that if the objective is to reach out to ordinary buyers in the open market, then staging becomes imperative and it can increase the sale price or secure the ask price. It is also important to note that most property owners are staging their houses before a sale. If someone does not consider staging, then their property may inadvertently look subpar compared to the accentuated houses in the same neighborhood or elsewhere in Baton Rouge.
