Top We Buy Houses company based in Columbia, Dependable Homebuyers is encouraging homeowners to stage their residential properties before listing them online. Evan Roberts, the owner and founder of the real estate investment firm, says that it has now become imperative for homeowners who want to sell their properties to stage their houses even before photos and videos are shot to be uploaded online. First impressions have always mattered. They are of unprecedented significance today since people no longer prioritize open houses or personalized viewings. Instead, most buyers develop a perception and decide by checking the photos and videos available online. Read the recent press release they published at https://docs.google.com/document/d/14jWg0eXPApyNuQaljTKR2oPhtzAxlh4-PEo6aRXfKTA/preview.

Staging is an accentuation process. It improves subtle aspects of a house so it becomes more pleasant. The objective is simple. Buyers should feel at home and they must be able to imagine living a comfortable life in the property. A property should always be perceived as pleasant, even if it does not have all the attributes a buyer is looking for. Staging can make this happen and this has a direct impact on the first impression among potential buyers. There is a direct effect of this on the traction generated by an online listing. More buyers check out properties that have well shot photos and videos. They are likely to make enquiries and schedule viewings. Homeowners will get more potential buyers if their properties are staged and presented well.

A staged property impresses buyers during viewings. Minor improvements such as a clean and de-cluttered house, neat and tidy rooms with slight accentuations such as house plants or aesthetic mats and other inexpensive changes can make a property immensely more desirable for interested buyers. Staging can influence buyers to make a closing offer. It can also help homeowners remain unperturbed with their ask prices. Homebuyers usually ask for a significant reduction in the ask price but they remain inflexible only when they have reasons to reject a property. A well staged property is hard to reject. Homebuyers also realize that a properly staged property will have other interested people so they have an urgency to make a closing offer that is acceptable to the seller.

Evan Roberts and his team at Dependable Homebuyers have been working with homeowners for almost a decade now. They have already purchased innumerable houses in Columbia and the surrounding areas. They provide relevant information including market trends and conditions affecting the prospects of a sale. They are now providing all necessary assistance to homeowners who want to stage their houses before selling. The company does not charge a hefty commission as realtors do. They provide all the help a homeowner needs to make the right first impression. Staging reduces wait time, more buyers are interested in the property and they are likely to agree with the ask price quoted by the seller. Selling a house becomes easier, simpler and quicker. The net return is also maximized with smart staging. Homeowners can contact Evan Roberts and his team at Dependable Homebuyers to stage their properties for a quick sale and to secure the best closing offer.
