DogGear has released a range of new items based on its research into the best dog training methods and gear. These items make it simpler than ever for pet parents to train their canines utilizing proven, research-based methods.

Among the many types of gear that are available, dog owners can find everything from standard items, such as leashes and collars to other, fun items that can be used around the house and play areas, such as treat delivery systems. Examples of collars and leads that can be used for training purposes include training collars, which help owners of puppies and inexperienced walkers learn to walk on a lead with confidence without pulling or straining.

Additional items include harnesses, such as no-pull harnesses, which can be great for those dogs that have difficulty walking without pulling, as they dissuade dogs from walking ahead of their owners. Harnesses are also available for older dogs, which can help provide them the support they need in their older age so that they are able to continue walking, even if they suffer from arthritis or joint pain, which can be especially important to help ensure they get the regular exercise they need to continue being mobile and active.

Pet owners whose dogs tend to be disobedient and need to be dissuaded from certain bad behaviors can find gear such as shock collars to help them in tough situations. DogGear has reviewed humane shock collars and can help owners determine which collar is right for each dog. In that same vein, anti-bark collars are also available, as they can help overexcitable dogs with their vocalizations. This is something that can be especially important for those who live in apartments or who have dogs that bark at neighbors.

DogGear understands that when it comes to training, it is not all about punishment, however. This is a fundamental part of their research when it comes to dog training. This is why they also offer dog gear, such as treat reward systems. Items such as toys that can deliver treats or systems that can sporadically shoot out treats for dogs are a great way to keep dogs feeling rewarded, especially when they have been on their best behavior.
