

Future Restored Describes Transition from Rehab to "Real Life"

August 22, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Future Restored has described the transition from rehab to "real life" on its website to help adults succeed in a successful recovery after undergoing treatment for addiction. There's often a high risk of relapse after patients leave rehab and return to their normal routine due to common stressors they encounter, which can make it easy to return to substance abuse. Future Restored is working to equip patients with an outpatient treatment plan that helps individuals identify stressors that are common triggers towards relapsing in order to ensure they can reduce the risk of returning to their addiction. The outpatient process is designed to provide the support needed for continued success after recovery.

Their outpatient program has flexible scheduling, with treatment sessions available in the morning, evening, and on the weekend after the individual has completed their time in rehab. The program works to accommodate the life of the patient and their commitment to recovery with the right tools, resources, and support. Part of the program includes creating lasting relationships to ensure the staff provides the necessary support as the patient transitions to their new life free from substance abuse. It can often be easy to feel alone, which is why the program is provided, as it offers accountability and guidance for as long as necessary.

About Future Restored

Future Restored consists of a team of military veterans, and health and mental professionals, who have united to help adults find the right rehab center to enter when suffering from drug addiction.

The company was founded by three military members who decided it was time to take action after witnessing drug epidemics in their communities and addictions among their loved ones. The company has helped countless individuals find the right treatment facility to enter.
