

Novato Pest Control Warns That Termites Destroy Wood In The Home

August 28, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Novato Pest Control, a pest control company based in Novato, California, has issued a warning that a common pest, the termite, can destroy a home by eating its wood parts. While most types of these soft-bodied insects are beneficial because they consume dead and dying vegetation, thus aiding in the decomposition of dead trees, many homes and buildings happen to have dead wood as part of their structures. Thus, these human structures happen to contain termite food, which results in these insects eating away at houses and other buildings.

A spokesperson for Novato Pest Control says, "Like many types of bees, the termite is a social insect. They cooperate to find food, raise young and build and defend nests. Second, they compensate for their weaknesses -- they keep their nests moist so their bodies don't dry out, and they build shelters to protect themselves from predators and the elements. Third, they do big things in small steps. They take tiny bites of wood to use as food, and they carry tiny particles of dirt and waste to build their homes. They also get help from even smaller organisms, like fungi, bacteria and protozoa."

The spokesperson continues, "Some may think of the termite as an aggressive destroyer of homes and property, but about 90 percent of termite species are beneficial. They consume, digest and make use of dead and dying vegetation. Some species also eat the waste of herbivores, which can contain undigested cellulose. In some places, these insects are the most important factor in breaking down cellulose. Without them, dead trees and herbivore waste wouldn't decompose normally -- they would gradually pile up, making it harder for animals to migrate and find food."

The problem is that many homes and buildings have wooden structures that are considered by termites as food. Naturally, they are not able to distinguish between a dead tree and the wood that is part of a house. People just need to do something to prevent termites from reaching those wooden parts of the home. In some countries, the homes are on stilts, which are then surrounded by termite deterrents, such as pie pans and pieces of metal.

Fortunately, preventing termite infestations is possible. This should be done even before constructing the home. Professional pest control companies like Novato Pest Control can treat the ground at the building site with a substance designed to kill or repel termites. This treatment is usually effective for at least five years. It is also possible to build the house in such a way that no wood is in direct contact with the soil. Other techniques include putting a moisture barrier under basements to help keep the area dry or removing clumps of soil under porches.
