Revive Lawn Care Products, an organic fertilizer supplier based out of Westminster, Colorado, has released a blog post detailing how garden enthusiasts may prep their lawn for fall and winter via the use of fertilizers and other methods.

John Eden, a representative for Revive, says, "August is already leaving us, which means summer is winding down and, before you know it, fall will be here. Winter will follow soon after. Considering the long summer we just had, with its hot temperatures, your lawn will definitely need some work so that it can recover. You also need to ensure that your lawn is prepared for the fall and winter. At Revive, it is important to us that everyone has a well-maintained lawn, which is why we want to explain a few things that you could do to ensure that your lawn is in a healthy state."

The first priority, according to Eden, is to ensure that each lawn gets around an inch of water per week. He recommends a deep watering once or twice a week over more frequent light watering, as watering too frequently can lead to lawns becoming vulnerable to disease.

Furthermore, as summer wanes and autumn comes in, homeowners should reduce how often they mow their lawns. When someone is mowing their lawns, they must also ensure that the blades are kept sharp and that the lawn is not mowed too short. However, the final mow of the season should leave the grass cut short. This step is important to protect the lawn through winter, as it can prevent the grass from being infected with diseases such as snow mold.

Fall is also the perfect time for lawns to be aerated—a process which involves perforating the soil with small holes to allow air, water, and nutrients to penetrate the grass roots. As the summer will no doubt have caused lawns to be stressed by the weather, the soil will likely have been compacted, partially due to the stress and partially due to foot traffic. The aeration process is absolutely necessary to allow the soil to decompact and get more oxygen, water, and nutrients to the roots, which are all key elements of a healthy lawn.

In addition, the transition between summer and fall is also the time to get lawns seeded, whether this involves simply repairing minor bare spots or a full reseeding. Performing a seeding along right after aeration is especially beneficial, as all the newly created holes in the soil will allow the grass seeds to take root deeply and get the proper nutrients they need. A reseeding performed at this time, says Eden, will ensure the lawn remains hardy and healthy throughout winter.

Additionally, Eden states, it is essential to continue fertilizing throughout the fall. Fertilizing with the right organic lawn fertilizer is important to ensure that the lawn gets the right amount of nitrogen, phosphorus, and potassium. All three of these elements are important ingredients of a healthy lawn.

Eden says, "Having your lawns fertilized is a big part of keeping them healthy throughout the fall and winter, and the best way for you to fertilize your lawn is to use an organic fertilizer. Our proprietary formula is designed to work with every lawn to provide the natural nutrients and wetting agents that will produce better, greener results. Our products are all backed by thorough scientific study and are designed to keep lawns healthy and green, which is why you'll not find a single unsatisfied customer."

Revive's statements about customer satisfaction are backed by the company's reviews. A recent customer, Hugh P., says, "If you want lawncare products, you absolutely cannot go wrong with Revive. I had tried several different products before I started using Revive Lawn Care Products, and I can most assuredly tell you that Revive makes the single best organic lawn fertilizer anywhere. I have a rather big lawn myself, and it's important to me and the wife that it's beautifully maintained well. Revive does the job wonderfully. They've got great service, great prices, and great people who will give you good advice when you need it. Highly recommended."
