Vancouver Gun Range, an indoor shooting range located in Vancouver, British Columbia, is excited to announce the release of their new Google Street View 360 Walkthrough. The walkthrough, which was produced by Sherman Hu, offers interested customers a better look at everything the Vancouver Gun Range has to offer. Working synonymously with Google Street View, the new 360 Walkthrough lets viewers experience a full panoramic tour of the entire interior of the shooting range.

With the assistance of the company's new virtual walkthrough tour, customers are now able to see every corner of the Vancouver Gun Range's lobby, training room, and indoor shooting range without going to the physical location. Since the virtual tour was shot by Sherman Hu—a Google Trusted Street View Photographer—the company is able to offer their customers a walkthrough that is consistent with the video quality that can be found on Google Street View. The clear video quality and its panoramic nature enable virtual visitors to investigate the scale of the gun range as well as the amenities it contains.

The Vancouver Gun Range's indoor shooting range, which can now be explored virtually on Google Maps, is the only indoor shooting range located in Vancouver. The virtual tour is helpful for first-time Vancouver Gun

Range customers as it allows them to see exactly what they are signing up for. All 13 of the company's shooting range stations are now visible from the tour, giving individual customers and groups the chance to observe the range's full shooting capacity.

The new visual tour also displays the shooting targets in great detail and those considering a future visit can get a preview of the types of targets they will be shooting at. "Firing a pistol has been on my bucket list for decades so I decided to check out The Vancouver Gun Range's new Google Street View walkthrough tour," says Wendy P. "After checking the place out online, I decided to drop by this range today to see what I needed in order to arrange a supervised shooting session. To my utter shock, they took me in immediately and allowed me to fire 50 rounds from three 9mm pistols. Everyone I met was professional, super friendly, and eager to help me realize this dream. My instructor was awesome and stayed beside me the entire shoot. I left feeling elated and so grateful that I can cross this long-time bucket list item off."

Another attractive feature that the Vancouver Gun Range offers is the various gun classes that customers can take. Similarly to the company's indoor shooting range, the new Google virtual tour shows viewers what the classroom looks like and how many people it can hold. The classes held by the shooting range include introductory gun safety courses that all first-time customers must take, possession acquisition and licensing classes, gun cleaning classes, a Handgun 101 class, and individual private lessons based on each customer's personal interests. Many of these classes are popular with groups, which makes the new virtual tour even more necessary. With the tour, groups are able to see how many people can sit in a class, as well as if the range is suitable as a whole for a particular group.

To learn more about the gun range and the events and classes they offer, visit the Vancouver Gun Range website. The website is customer-friendly and regularly updated with upcoming specials, events, and new guns that can be used at the range. In order to encourage their customers' enthusiasm about indoor shooting, the range often hosts annual events, such as Glock Day, and even holiday-themed events hosted both at the range and out in the community. During Halloween, The Vancouver Gun Range hosts their Pumpkin Shoot, and around Christmas time the range encourages their customers to join their employees at the local toy drive.
