Asset Growth and Protection has announced a service to help individuals prepare for retirement using tax free Roth IRA. Recent studies suggest that many consumers are not planning for retirement, and much of this is due to the confusion regarding retirement accounts.

"The financial markets saw ups and downs since the last newsletter and, thanks to our programs, none of our clients lost any money," says Jt McDonald of Asset Growth and Protection. "That is a blessing. I was asked last week by a national trade magazine to comment on the best part of my work and I told them it was the families we get to help."

McDonald goes on to say that the children and grandchildren that he seldom gets to meet are the true benefit of the company's services.

"That leads me to you taking time with your loved ones. I was reminded of this in Minneapolis a few weeks back when I spoke with a group of business owners on scheduling a date night with one's spouse and another one's family. At the end of the day, work will always be there. So take time to be with your loved ones and we will protect and grow what you have been working hard for. Don't forget if you have a true tax free retirement plan, the government thanks you very much, for they are ready to spend it for you!"

A Roth IRA is much like a traditional IRA, with one major exception. The difference between a Roth and traditional IRA hinges on when and how much in taxes are paid. Financial planners suggest Roth IRAs, particularly for younger people, because of the lower tax rate.

Traditional IRAs give investors a tax deduction, but only for the year that the contribution is made. Roth IRAs allow investors to contribute money at any given time, after tax money, and then allow for withdrawals of the principal and earnings after retirement, also tax free.

Those looking for more information about Roth IRAs or anyone who would like a consultation about retirement planning can contact Asset Growth and Protection or visit their official website.
