One of their many satisfied clients, Catherine Jevic, says in a Google review, "I have been using Capital Plumbing & Heating for the last few years for our plumbing and heating in the house. The level of professionalism, friendliness of the staff on the phone, and overall quality of work have continued to impress me. They've re-done the plumbing in my 1954 home from the bathroom, kitchen, and stack, as well as maintained both the furnace and water heater. I am always very impressed and look forward to continuing to work with them over the coming years."

Meanwhile, Bies notes that a regular HVAC maintenance regime provides a number of financial and health benefits. Saving money, for instance, is one of the main reasons that homeowners seek to maintain their HVAC systems. "If your heating and cooling system are running efficiently, it will result in lesser electricity consumption. HVAC maintenance is also an effective way to prevent emergency repairs as well as any major system problems," he says. Furthermore, Bies states that a properly maintained HVAC system generally improves the air quality of living spaces as well as prevents respiratory problems, such as asthma, allergies, coughs, and colds.

In addition, he asserts that a well-maintained HVAC unit lasts longer and provides better cooling and heating in a home or building. "Regular HVAC maintenance extends the life of the system, putting off expensive repairs and replacement costs. In addition, an HVAC system is a costly investment and you'd want to extend its service for as long as possible. In fact, a well-maintained HVAC system can serve you for more than 10 years," he says. Lastly, Bies recommends having a regular HVAC maintenance regime to avoid inconvenient system breakdowns and ensure everyone's safety at home and the workplace.
