Dallas, Texas based The Net Lender, a local financial aid provider, has made it their mission to ensure their services are available to as many people as possible. The company states that they are especially cognizant of the tough economic conditions faced by Dallas residents, and are therefore prepared to do everything in their power to assist communities in need. “Financial troubles are not easy to handle, no matter who you are or where you live,” says The Net Lender, who is also known to their customers as TNL. “However, certain parts of the country tend to get hit worse than others, or have to weather national dips in the economy more often than they should. Residents in Dallas often feel like they take on the brunt of this upheaval, and we have found that families are often the most affected, especially if they have children of any age. At the very least, they tend to have more difficulty bouncing back, especially when a change in the market causes one or more of the breadwinners in the family to lose their jobs.”

Compounding the issue, according to TNL, is the fact that such members of the community are also often turned away by the institutions that are otherwise supposed to help them. “If you’re in a tight spot, financially, you might think that it’s a good idea to approach your bank for help,” says TNL. They continue,

?However, as our customers frequently tell us, you may ask the bank for help only to find that you are deemed ineligible for one reason or the other.? According to the company, clients who are denied financial aid from their bank are usually informed that this is due to their poor credit score, or even an unstable income. ?In short,? states TNL, ?such institutions are not willing to believe that you can pay them back.? However, TNL strongly disagrees with this perspective. The company points out that financial services that are tied to thresholds such as credit score have the unfortunate effect of being unavailable to the type of client who needs them the most. ?Given the way the economy fluctuates, you can find that your financial health is damaged through no fault of your own,? notes The Net Lender. ?No matter where you begin, you can easily find yourself making hard decision after hard decision with your income and savings to the extent that you wreck your credit score, or upset any number of other aspects of your life that banks use to gauge your eligibility for aid. This effectively means that you have few options to rely on when you?re in trouble.?

Fortunately, TNL states that they have the answer. Customers who own a car and possess its car title have the ability to use it as collateral for a quick cash advance from The Net Lender, a trusted financial aid provider that has been helping people in dire straits for many years. According to the company, their mission to help as many people as possible has enabled them to drop several overly-stringent requirements for those who apply for assistance. ?You?ll be glad to know that we do not care about your credit score,? says TNL. ?Your car title is the biggest asset you need to engage our services.? TNL does clarify that they have a few mandatory requirements, such as all applicants having to be of a certain age.

Given that the company also believes in maintaining full transparency with their customers, they have taken steps to ensure that all the requirements are clearly listed on their website. Prospective clients are invited to visit the website to learn more. They may also use the website to complete the company?s easy, three-step application process, following which they can have the cash they require wired directly to their account in only 24 hours. ?At TNL, the amount of help we can give you depends entirely on your car,? says the company. ?Never worry about your credit score holding you back from receiving help again.?

Those who would like to engage The Net Lender?s services may contact the company directly by phone or visit their website. Those who prefer to visit TNL in person and speak with a customer representative may find their Dallas premises at the following link: <https://goo.gl/maps/UeLYjDHmu29UBqYc9>.
