September 25, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

NJ Center for CoolSculpting, based in Summit, New Jersey, has announced that they are offering CoolSculpting on stomach. CoolSculpting makes use of a cold therapy known as cryolipolysis. The FDA has approved it as a controlled cooling treatment. It is used for getting rid of stubborn fat that cannot be eliminated by diet and exercise. An important benefit is that it does not require surgery, needles or downtime in order for the patient to feel and look better. Meanwhile, the NJ Center for CoolSculpting has also announced that they are offering a $1000 discount for the first treatment.

Hardik Soni from NJ Center for CoolSculpting says, "At NJ Center for CoolSculpting, we conduct hundreds of body contouring sessions every month in the setting of our peaceful and luxury office. You will be discussing your goals and treatment plan with the physician during your consultation. With CoolSculpting, we use controlled cold to freeze and kill fat cells, without using chemicals, needles, or anesthesia. These fat cells are flushed out by the body naturally."

Typically, a single CoolSculpting procedure will get rid of about 20 percent of body fat on the target area, and people are able to get their desired results with just one treatment. For those who want more dramatic results, they can undergo three or more treatments, which are performed within a time span of six to eight weeks. With regards to the recovery time, there is actually no recovery period per se. People would be able to return to their usual activities the same day as their treatment. Those who want more information may want to check out the center's Facebook page at <https://www.facebook.com/NJCenterForCoolSculpting/>.

They also would like to point out that it is the ideal solution for both men and women for getting rid of fat bulges. This is because it can target both fibrous and firm fat and it can work on all body types. Before undergoing this treatment or any other treatment, the physician will discuss with the client the various side effects, results and other information regarding the treatment.

For some patients, they might prefer a tummy tuck. However, the tummy tuck involves an invasive and potentially dangerous surgery, so people are advised to consult with a reputable physician who provides CoolSculpting in order to make the appropriate comparison.

A tummy tuck is actually a major operation that usually requires one to three hours to complete. After that, the patient will need to wait for an additional two weeks before being able to resume sedentary work and up to one month before exercising or doing more rigorous physical activities. In contrast, CoolSculpting treatment will only take 30 to 60 minutes. And after the treatment is completed, the patient can immediately return to normal activities. Having no downtime, CoolSculpting is ideal for people who have limited time available. In fact, some people would opt to have the procedure done during lunch or after work. For those who have a substantial amount of loose and sagging skin, a tummy tuck may be preferred. CoolSculpting alone will not be able to remove extra skin.

In terms of budget, CoolSculpting would be preferable as it will only cost between $750 and $1,500 per treatment. This amount will depend on the size of the area and the physician, number of applicators, and the geographic location. On the other hand, a tummy tuck will cost between $3,000 and $12,000, depending on the clinic, surgeon, geographic location, the amount of skin to get rid of, and whether the patient has to spend time in the hospital for recovery.

There are many other possible target areas for CoolSculpting, aside from the stomach. These include the arms, thighs, breasts, buttocks, and the submental or chin area.
