Termite and Pest Control Services in Lathrop, a pest management organization serving Lathrop, CA, has released a warning to home owners and property owners that rats tend to invade homes more often during winter in their effort to escape the cold temperatures. The also recently circulated a blog post on their web site to notify people that unwelcome home intruders, like mice, have been found to be hiding in automobiles as well as pickups, and have been causing vehicle damage. The reason behind this is that rats are drawn to the warm interior of the autos. And since homes likewise have warmer interiors, people can also expect to have rodents to try to get inside the home.

In a recent article, nationwide pest exterminator associations cautioned car owners concerning the risks posed by rats to their vehicles during wintertime. For instance, one car in which the lighting had not been working, upon inspection it was found that a mouse had chewed the electrical wiring and caused a short in the electrical system. Some autos would have shorted electric systems because mice have eaten through cables. Automobile users are therefore warned to keep an eye out for signals that rodents are finding their way inside the motor vehicle. As an example, insulation or wiring insulation which are lying around or beneath the car can indicate that rodents could have been eating on wire connections. There may also be rodent waste in and the around the vehicle. Home owners may also want to hunt for these signs in the house. The Owner of Termite and Pest Control Services in Lathrop states that, "Cold weather really brings rats into the equation. They try to come into the home."

The problem with mice along with other rodents is that they usually bite on things like electrical wires. Additionally, they may bring in bacteria, viruses and parasitic organisms which could adversely affect the health of folks living in the home. It is for these reasons, among numerous others, that homeowners and property owners will need the services of pest control businesses.

As well as providing their pest control solutions to homes, they will also offer their services to commercial stores. They also have a wide array of customers such as real estate management organizations and commercial property owners particularly, that includes many business owners in the Lathrop area.

Individuals who browse the company web site will see that they are definitely devoted to helping homeowners and property owners to rid themselves of insects. On their website readers will find material that highlights how they can start preparing a residence or establishment for the purpose of treatment.

The organization carries out a unique process to eliminate unwanted pests within the home. These are generally: total examination, in house management, defense of outside, and repeated observation. In summary, what they do is ascertain the pests, get rid of the unwanted pests, create a secure and protective boundary from the outside, and then make sure that the unwanted pests will not come back.
