December 27, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Phoenix, AZ ? As people begin to plan and prepare meals for the holidays, Phoenix Pest and Rodent Specialists is reminding homeowners to look out for uninvited pests in pantries and food storage areas.

?Be vigilant, these pantry pests are known for making homes in many of the ingredients we use to whip up sweet treats during the holiday season?, said Bob Cow, Co-owner. ?As people dig out dried goods that haven?t been used since the last holiday, it?s important to thoroughly inspect and discard any that appear damaged or infested.?

The National Pest Management Association (NPMA), has indicated that Indian meal moths are the most common pests that infest pantries. Though there doesn?t appear to be a direct connection between diseases or sickness and these pests, they can quickly become a nuisance because they breed so quickly.

Phoenix Pest and Rodent Specialists suggests that homeowners inspect items in the pantry, checking expiration dates before use. They also recommend storing them in sealed containers with secured lids which will keep pests out.

The company also stated, ?Cleaning up on a regular basis, making sure crumbs are picked up, and cleaning pantries, cabinets and cupboards with soap and water on a regular basis can greatly reduce risks of infestation.?

For the past 10 years, Phoenix Pest & Rodent Specialists has been helping homeowners and businesses throughout the Phoenix Area. Those interested can find out more about the services that they offer at their official website: <https://pestcontrol-phoenix.net>.
