Scottsdale, AZ -- Termites are capable of inflicting severe damage to wood structures, including the beams and joists that support a house. They are quiet and often are not detected until the damage is done. According to the experts at Superior Rodent & Pest Control, termites can access houses through cracks that are less than 1/16th of an inch to get to their preferred food, the wood studs, joists and plates in the walls.

After accessing a Scottsdale home, termites develop colonies by building mud tubes throughout the interiors of walls. The tubes can run throughout the home, from top to bottom, giving these pests access to every piece of wood in the home.

The termite control experts at Superior Rodent & Pest Control are professionals trained to remove and prevent termites in Scottsdale and surrounding areas. They assess the specific situation, select the best treatment option, and develop an application plan that will keep a home safe from termite infestation.

"For homes in the Southwest, unfortunately it's not a question of 'if' an home will be subject to subterranean termites, but 'when,' especially when a home is untreated," says Brad Dall, Owner of the local Scottsdale pest control company. "Arizona is in a high-risk region for termites."
