Termites are one of the most destructive pests, causing hundreds of thousands of dollars in damage to properties every single year. This is likely because these pests go undetected for quite some time before being discovered. Termite Control Specialists of Los Angeles has announced they are offering services to Los Angeles residents to help prevent and treat termites in the local area.

“Los Angeles has many termite species but the most common are Subterranean Termites and Western Drywood Termites. However, regardless of the termite species on your property, you need to have them taken care of and our termite specialists will be happy to do so,” the business owner stated.

It can be difficult for a person to identify the termite species on their property but that’s what local exterminators are for. The company states that subterranean termites reside under the soil around properties and structures. They typically gain access through the wood that is touching the ground. Hollow areas in walls and foundations are at risk of inviting termites to infest a property.

“These subterranean termites will eat more than just the wood on your property. They also consume paper products, plant-based goods and cellulose-based products,” the manager of the company said. “Rather than waiting to notice signs of these termites on your property, we advise having an inspection done at least twice a year to prevent significant (and expensive) structure damage to your property,” the manager added.

According to the business owner, drywood termites construct their nests in wood, not soil. They can also infest in different areas of a property or just one specific location. Drywood termites are destructive because they chew through the wood which can be very detrimental to certain parts of a property and weaken the structure.

“It’s best to seek professional termite control in Los Angeles, CA if you suspect or have confirmed termites are on your property. They are not a pest that one can deal with through DIY solutions and require a professional for effective relief,” the owner said.
