There has been a recent rise in pest infestations in Los Angeles County and many people believe it is because the pests are becoming more resilient to everyday treatments and more adapt to their environment.

The president of Hacienda Heights Pest & Rodent Removal went on to say, "Pests are getting harder and harder to control and prevent. They are becoming more resilient to most treatments and are spreading more rapidly than ever before. Professional treatment is becoming the only way to take care of these pests because of this. I believe by doing this, we can control the rise in infestations that are occurring."

The company was pretty busy on their opening day with 40 new phone calls. The company was happy to be able to help each of those customers on the phone. Some of those infestations included bed bugs, fleas,
