Reel Time Fishing, based in Clarkston, Washington, is pleased to announce they have been offering fishing guides in Hanford Reach since September. The area is one of the most famous among tourists and locals alike. These fishing guides are carried out by one of the company's experts, who assists and instructs attendees on the basics of fishing in this beautiful landscape.

Toby Wyatt, a spokesperson for Reel Time Fishing, states, "This is the best time of the year to visit the section of the Columbia River known as Hanford Reach. This area is one of the most challenging to catch fish in, but we will teach you everything that you need to know to succeed here. The reason we chose this season above others is due to its favorable weather, which makes for a much better experience. In addition to the astonishing views, it will create a remarkable experience that you will never forget."

The Hanford Reach section is a natural spawning area for some of the biggest salmon that navigate the Columbia River, making it the best place to catch the fish (despite the other challenges that are present). The area is considered a free-flowing section of the Columbia River because it is the longest stretch between dams, making it flow like a normal river. The only difference?and the biggest challenge?here is the water's level, which can fluctuate from 3-6 feet in a single day.

The company notes that their Hanford Reach Fishing Guides begin at the start of the season, where they focus on covering a fishing method called "Down Hill Trolling," or "Down River Trolling." The method itself consists of flowing along with the current, and it is proven to cover a bigger area in a faster time than any other method, producing the best results as well. However, this method works best while the fish are traveling, and the company says that they switch their methods accordingly as the season progresses.

"It is all about using the right method at the right time," notes Wyatt. "While this region is one of the most challenging, we can guarantee successful fishing sessions by adapting to the situation. While others have failed here, we have continued to prove our expertise and adaptability over the years, obtaining the best results and maintaining a great fishing experience for our attendees."

During the second part of the season, the company states that they change their fishing methods to back trolling eggs and plugs. They also focus on the spawning point, where these fall Chinook Salmons will be more dominant, in preparation for the fish?s mating season. The salmon are noticeably bigger during this period, often pushing or exceeding 50 pounds.

Reel Time Fishing is one of the most distinguished fishing guide companies in the area, having served the community for several years and developed a stable of outstanding skills in the same period. Their guides include fishing for different types of species, including Steelhead, Salmon, Smallmouth Bass, Sturgeon, Walleye, and Kokanee, located at different rivers across the state, including the Clearwater River, Dworshak Reservoir, Snake River, Grande Ronde River, Columbia River, and the Florida Keys.

The expertise and excellence of their fishing guides is illustrated by the highly positive comments left online by past attendees. On the Google review platform, they have a near-perfect review rating of 4.9/5 Stars over almost 40 customer reviews. They are one of the best-rated fishing guides in Washington.

One of their most recent reviews, written by Andrew Czapla on this platform, states, "Fished the Hanford Reach with Toby. From the minute our lines hit the water we were on fish! Fantastic experience and he explained everything to us. My dad and I have never caught fish that big before. Whole different ball game than the average lake trout. Toby coached us through the process and we landed both of our fish. Thanks again for the awesome experience!"
