Local exterminator, Pest Control of Fort Worth, has announced they are offering bed bug extermination services. This particular pest's presence has increased in the Fort Worth area over the past few months alone. Many residents have likely been paying attention to the news where rideshare vehicles have become victim to these horrible pests.

It's not a surprise that rideshare vehicles are having an issue with bed bugs because these pests are great hitchhikers. That's how they get from place to place and how they easily infest so many different areas and properties," the manager stated.

The unfortunate part is that they hitch a ride on a person, and that person unknowingly carries the bugs inside their property, or any property for that matter. "We thoroughly inspect the property to identify the level of infestation if bed bugs are present. From there we can appropriately plan a course of action that will effectively treat the pests. However, if the infestation is serious it could take multiple treatments to get the desired results," the manager added.

Bed bugs are about the size of an apple seed, so while they're small, they can be detected if one knows what to look for. There are steps that property owners can take to inspect and identify if bed bugs are present, or they can call a professional pest control Fort Worth company to inspect for them.

These particular pests typically invade and infest a bed first. The mattress, bed frame and bedding can all be hiding spots for these tiny bugs. If left untreated, however, the bed bugs will start branching out to other areas of the room, if not other areas of the property.

The manager stated, "These bugs will hide between wall décor and light fixtures, wall outlets and wall trim, even curtains can become a hiding spot. Typically when they're noticeable in other areas of the room and not just the bed, the infestation level is pretty serious. That's why we always encourage residents to take immediate action when bed bugs are suspected or identified."
