Richardson, TX - October 04, 2019 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Richardson, TX based Richardson Pain & Wellness is pleased to inform the wider public that they may avail themselves of the center's Testosterone Treatment Therapy program. This variant of hormone replacement therapy is aimed at men who want to reclaim their vitality and vigour. Interested parties are encouraged to look up the clinic online and learn how they can begin receiving Testosterone Replacement Therapy in Richardson.

Also known as TRT, the program is designed to increase a patient's testosterone levels, or T levels. While the name may sound intimidating, Richardson Pain & Wellness reassures patients that the treatment simply consists of introducing the hormone testosterone directly to the subject's bloodstream. They state, "Among the candidates for therapy are those who suspect themselves to be testosterone deficient. Though there is not a universally accepted number that indicates abnormally low testosterone, most physicians agree that a "normal" level will range between 300 and 1000 nanograms per deciliter."

The benefits that a patient may see following their TRT procedures are numerous. As the clinic states, it can reduce the possibility of you suffering a heart attack or building high blood pressure. However, your body's production of testosterone decreases as you age. It normally peaks in the late 20s and gradually falls down each year, which slowly produces various aging problems.?

When patients are in a state known as low T, a situation in which their testosterone levels decrease below normal, they can find themselves subject to a variety of symptoms ranging in severity from mild to acute. While low T levels are sometimes associated with relatively minor symptoms such as hair loss, weight fluctuations, and poor mood regulation, patients can also fare far worse. For instance, low T has also been associated with an increased rate of mortality (a higher risk of death).

The clinic adds, "With these things in mind, it is important that a person who believes themselves (or a loved one) to be testosterone deficient consult a physician to schedule a blood test. With a simple blood test, a doctor can determine whether or not the patient's hormone levels are a cause for concern and whether or not the patient is a candidate for therapy."

Patients who discover they need to undergo TRT will be pleased to learn that they may opt between a few methods of treatment, with some options being as simple as taking medication orally (via pills and/or dissolving strips), topical applications (via gels and creams), or even testosterone pellets (that can be implanted in the body). Notably, Richardson Pain & Wellness strongly discourages patients from relying on oral medication unless they have no choice, since this technique is also believed to contribute to complications with the liver. According to the clinic, however, patients who undergo TRT most often have their T levels increased via testosterone injections that deliver the hormone directly to the bloodstream. This method is also widely considered to be the most effective.

While the clinic considers TRT their specialization, they can also help their patients undergo fast medical weight loss. The difference between medical weight loss programs and other, more conventional weight loss techniques found elsewhere, says the clinic, is that the former is carried out under the direct supervision of medical professionals who prioritize their patient's best interests and health. They clarify that, "These programs offer ongoing support and supervision so you always know that you are doing what is safe and healthy for your body. There is great security in knowing that a medical professional is overseeing your results and that they will ensure you are getting the best results possible as they adjust and tweak your program as you go along." Such programs allow patients to continually receive feedback from their doctor, maintaining a steady but quick weight loss regimen that will not put them at risk.
