iProven, a professional healthcare manufacturer based out of Dordrecht, The Netherlands, is pleased to announce that their product, the iProven FL-100, provides women an accurate way to test for ovulation at home. The company is dedicated to offering high-tech, top quality healthcare devices, and has a line of other healthcare products that include pregnancy tests, baby thermometers, and blood pressure monitors.

Suzanne, a representative for iProven, says, "Nothing is more exciting than trying to welcome new life into your family. But, as I'm sure you know, the process can be very stressful at times too, especially if things are not going as quickly as you'd hoped they would. Whether you've just started trying to conceive or whether you've been trying for a little longer, you need to have a reliable method to test for ovulation. That is why we at iProven developed our fertility monitor kit. We want to help couples who are trying to conceive as best as we can."

iProven's FL-100 promises to be an accurate way to monitor fertility, with the company claiming that the ovulation test strips boast results with an accuracy of 99%. iProven claims that the FL-100 removes all the guesswork from knowing exactly what is going on inside one's body. Due to this, the process for testing fertility with the FL-100 is designed to be as simple and straightforward as possible. The test strips simply need to be dipped into the tester's urine for five seconds and, after three minutes, the results will be ready. In addition to the ovulation test strips, the FL-100 also comes packaged with four pregnancy tests for free.

"Every female body is different, it's unique," says Suzanne. "With our tests, you'll notice when your LH-surge is approaching but you do need to know exactly how to read the results because some women have a positive LH-test during their entire cycle. The only difference is that their second line will become darker when their ovulation day approaches. Other women will only see a faint second line appear on the day they have their LH-surge. In both cases, it is imperative that you know what is going on in your own body, so you can know when to do the baby dance!"

iProven's dedication to providing high quality healthcare products has earned them a strong positive reputation, and customers of the FL-100 Ovulation Test Strips often express that they are impressed with the product. The FL-100 has a near perfect rating on the iProven website, with 90% of customers having rated it five stars. Ashleigh Lawrence says in her review: "I purchased this product last year when trying to conceive (TTC). The ovulation tests were very accurate and the pregnancy tests are even more accurate. I started taking the pregnancy tests a few days before my expected period and the test showed positive. I immediately took a First Response test that I had bought in a store (which is way more expensive than these tests) and it showed negative. It took three more days for the more expensive tests to show a positive. iProven was able to tell me first! Highly recommended!"

In another review, Lindsey E. says, "I bought these for a dear friend and I love that getting these tests has given my friend some hope and excitement that she may finally get to have that baby she wants and deserves so badly. I also love that it has two free pregnancy tests with it, which shows the company really believes in their product. My friend has quit her job to concentrate on making a baby, and I hope that, in some small way, I get to be part of that happiness!"
