Keenhealth, a home health products business based in Denver, Colorado, has announced that their K-DT-131 GR digital thermometer for baby is back in stock. This product has been unavailable for some time because of the high demand but the company has finally managed to get it back in stock. This digital thermometer is designed for rectal temperature measurements for the baby. This is because rectal measurements are the most accurate. Plus, this thermometer has been extensively tested to ensure its accuracy.

Lily, a spokesperson for Keenhealth, says, "As a parent, you want to make sure your newborn is happy and healthy. Especially when your baby is younger than 6 months, you want to be able to act immediately when a fever is at play."

She adds, "That's why you want to have a baby thermometer you can count on. This digital medical thermometer is the device you need if you want to know whether you should contact your doctor."

It is important for this digital thermometer for babies to be accurate and fast, what with babies being notorious for being irritable, especially when they are not feeling well. Not only can this rectal thermometer provide an accurate reading but it can do it fast, within 10 seconds. Also, the thermometer has a flexible tip, which means any discomfort felt by the baby is minimized. And by applying some baby oil to the tip, inserting it would be easy. This means taking the temperature could be over and done even before the baby notices it.

This digital baby thermometer also has a waterproof tip, which means that parents can easily wash and disinfect it before and after use to ensure that the baby will not be at risk of contracting an infection. Plus, it comes with a hard case so that mommies and daddies can store it after cleaning and disinfecting it. Thus, it can be assured to be ready for the next use by storing it in an easily accessible drawer.

Parents are especially worried during the flu season, particularly with a newborn baby up to six months old. Naturally, they would want to act quickly if their baby has a fever. They would be able to do that with the K-DT-131 GR digital thermometer. If they suspect the baby has a fever, all they need to do is retrieve the thermometer from the drawer, get it out of the hard case, put some baby oil to the tip, insert it gently, wait for 10 seconds, and they've got a reliable reading of the baby's body temperature. This thermometer also has a switch that allows the user to switch from Fahrenheit to Celsius and vice versa.

Meanwhile, flu viruses are most common during the fall and winter seasons. Thus, the flu season has already started and people are advised to take the necessary precautions. Aside from getting a seasonal flu vaccine, health authorities recommend that people stay away from those who are sick, wash their hands regularly to minimize the spread of germs, and for those who are sick with the flu to stay home from work or school to avoid spreading the flu virus to others. And, of course, parents need to be on the look for their young children especially babies. If they notice something unusual or their baby feels hot, they need to whip out their thermometer and take a temperature reading. If the baby has a fever, they should bring the baby to the doctor as soon as possible. The CDC also recommends that people who are at high risk of serious flu complications and who exhibit flu symptoms during the flu season to get treated with flu antiviral drugs as soon as possible without waiting for any confirmatory testing. Those who are not susceptible to having serious flu complications may also get treated with flu antiviral drugs, particularly if treatment can start within 48 hours.
