DogGear is pleased to announce their tips for success when approaching a landlord about getting a dog. The team's first tip is to demonstrate credibility and responsibility, stating that this helps the landlord develop trust and put them at ease. DogGear clarifies that this lets the landlord know that renters are capable of caring for a pet. DogGear also recommends having a good veterinarian, since it is crucial to be able to show that the dog is healthy and up-to-date on all of their vaccinations. Renters can ensure that a landlord gets the right idea about the pet by including photos of the dog and showcasing good behavior.

DogGear uses their product testing and dog owning experience to recommend the top products for dogs and their owners, as well as to provide tips around living with and training dogs. The product recommendations and advice are vetted by the DogGear team and often verified by veterinarians or pet experts. With these resources, the DogGear team works to help dog owners provide the best care for their dogs.
